Insurance Claims Unusual - Odd

"Life is one damn thing after another," Mark Twain is thought to have said.

Or was it the guy who was thrown through a window by an elephant?

Or the hunter whose false teeth were stolen by a woodchuck?

Or one of the many other people whose weird cases were among more than 18 million insurance claim payments handled by Aetna Life & Casualty in 1972?

In another case involving false teeth, imagine a mother's dismay upon finding that her child had flushed a visitor's dentures down the toilet.

A Cleveland man quietly browsing in a discount store got more than he bargained for at the shirt counter. A boa constrictor slithered out of its cage in the store's pet department and mistook the man's leg for a warm vine.

A Pennsylvania woman gave Aetna's claims people a chuckle with a case of mistaken identity. Seeing a familiar looking pair of legs protruding from beneath the family car, she announced the readiness of lunch, adding an affectionate wifely pat.

The startled mechanic, however, was not her husband. Thrown into total confusion, the man lurched, slamming his head against the car and knocking himself cold. He came to on a stretcher and, red-faced, began to explain. In the ensuing gale of laughter, the ambulance attendants dropped the stretcher, adding a broken arm to the man's fractured dignity.

Despite their billing as man's best friend, dogs don't necessarily make a man's life any easier. In West Virginia a female dog being pursued by a large pack of ardent admirers and playing hard-to-get, took refuge under a shiny new car. The would-be suitors, exasperated at this female ploy, began to fight among themselves.

The car was the loser, though, with a caved-in fender and hood moulding, chewed-up tire and torn-out signal light wiring. And Aetna chalked up $95.29 to "canine quarrel."

Another dog in neighboring Virginia decided he could shift for himself. Left unattended in the front seat of a running car, the pooch opted for "reverse." As the auto rammed into a neighbor's garage across the street, the rattled dog let out a real Virginia woof.

Also putting the wrong foot forward was a Florida man returning to his hotel room a bit inebriated. He took an unsteady step toward the bed. Body followed foot--right out the open window.
