Cold water is OK if you're thirsty.

Gas gives you hot water when you want it!

Yes, cold water is fine for quenching your thirst. But if you're a housewife faced with the daily chores that only hot water will conquer, it's a different story. To be assured of the gallons and gallons of really HOT hot water you'll need, you should have a gas-fired water heater in your home. No other household appliance is called upon to do as big a job, with so little attention, as a natural gas automatic water heater. In many homes, a 40-gallon gas water heater will do a better job than a flameless water heater of much larger capacity. Remember, too, that water heated with natural gas can help you reach Cascade's highly desirable All-Gas Rate—a real money-saver.
