Anglers To Find Water Adequate In Area

Sport fishermen are advised that the forecast for water conditions this coming summer in lakes and streams around the state ranges from poor in some areas to normal in others. Average to below normal snowpack and expected runoff will cause the varying water conditions anglers will find during the coming trout season.

In the Owyhee and Malheur drainages, anglers should find good water conditions in most impoundments but the streams may be lower than normal. Snow cover is good and moisture is near average. The Owyhee streamflows should be good but the Malheur is expected to be lower than usual. If present conditions continue, Antelope and Bully Creek reservoirs will not fill.

Water flows in the Steens and Trout Creek mountains should be good to excellent but streams in the remainder of Harney County are expected low. The snowpack varies from over 100 percent of normal in the Steens and Trout Creek drainages to only 65 percent in the Silver Creek drainage.

In northeastern Oregon the water outlook is good through the Wallows but well below average in the Powder and Grande Ronde drainages. Reservoir storage at Thief Valley, Phillips, and other impoundments is about normal.

Cold Springs and McKay reservoirs are not expected to fill this season. Streamflows in the Umatilla Basin and in Morrow County are expected low throughout the summer. Snowpack varies from only 44 percent of normal in the Umatilla drainage to about 52 percent in the Walla Walla.

In central Oregon, reservoir storage is above normal and most should fill in spite of a low snowpack. Snowpack through the Deschutes and Ochoco varies from about one-half of normal in the Tumalo and Squaw Creek drainages to about 70 percent in the Crooked River area. Most streams are expected to be lower than usual, especially late in the season. Below average to fair water supply is the forecast for the lower Deschutes and Hood River area. Streamflows in Hood River, White River, and others are expected well below normal and are forecast to be very low in late spring and summer. The snowpack is only 40 percent of normal.

The Willamette Drainage is also expected to be below average with streamflow forecasts from 60 to 80 percent of average. The snowpack varies from only 30 to 60 percent of normal. Reservoirs in the drainage are at low levels and if present conditions prevail, most are not expected to fill.

Most impoundments in the Rogue and Umpqua basins are expected to fill but streamflows will be average to below average. Streams draining from the Siskiyou will experience water shortages during late spring and summer.
