Herb Sez ...

A lady in the store the other day asked me why I didn't get a hair cut. She informed me that I reminded her of a white sidewall tire. I figured that she may have a point there so I decided to get some cash from my wife and get a hair cut. Actually getting a hair cut ain't so bad. It doesn't hurt like getting a tooth pulled, but it is easy to put off getting the head scalped for another day. After all hair doesn't grow all that fast, but if put off for several weeks a person can get to lookin' rather shabby. Anyhow the main point of my mentioning the barber's shop is because that's where we settled the Vietnam fracas. Now that we got the thing wound down and our prisoners returned to us just what's going to happen? We didn't crawl to them and beg them to return our men to us. Instead we bombed hell out of the country with a promise to really let them have it if they didn't shape up. Finally we're out, but now what? Will the North and the South go at it again with hammer and tongs? The answer to that one was, "Probably yes." Really why should they do otherwise? War has been a way of life in that part of the world for centuries. It's almost a cinch that if North Vietnam doesn't head south, South Vietnam will take their hesitancy as a show of weakness and strike out northward. Their individual strengths won't be greatly considered. The only thing that will count is their willingness to get off the farm and have a brawl. Will the United States reconstruct North Vietnam? The administration may want to. You and I don't know just what, if anything, was promised for the release of our men, but Congress fearing the wrath of the voter will vote to not reconstruct. Of course we'll have a dandy out because the two factions will heat up the cooled off rhubarb and we can say, "as long as you insist in tearing things to pieces it would be just plain foolish for us to rebuild anything." The big point is that the war is at long last over and we had a strong feeling that it's going to stay that way. I came away from the barber feeling refreshed in more ways than one. It would sure save the United States a lot of trouble if Congressmen got their hair cuts in New Meadows.
