Bomb Threats Senseless

One thing that a bomb threat, such as received at Malheur Memorial Hospital Tuesday afternoon, does do, is demonstrate the efficiency of our capable staff at the hospital. It also demonstrates the skill and willingness to help of all our public servants, which includes police, fire, ambulance crews, power company representatives, and others in the community who will volunteer to help in an emergency.

Not to be overlooked is the willingness of nearby communities to help out, and ambulances from Vale, Ontario and Payette all volunteered their services, with the latter two transporting critical patients to Holy Rosary Hospital in Ontario.

What a waste of time and manpower, and so senseless, but it does show that our people and facilities are prepared to meet disaster if and when it strikes. The hospital staff had been drilled in a Disaster Plan, and they responded when such a thing seemed possible, if not imminent.

Gale Christensen, hospital administrator, called a news conference Tuesday afternoon after the necessary work had been done and the "smoke had cleared." It was apparent from the notes taken throughout the episode that all agencies reacted in business-like fashion, and everyone worked together. Christensen said that "all members of the staff responded perfectly, and not one order was questioned" during the long and sometimes hectic afternoon.

We commend our administrator; Mrs. Bennett, director of nurses; Chief Allen; and all police, fire, and hospital personnel who responded so willingly.

Can you imagine the kind of a sick mind who would call in a bomb threat? It's bad enough when the schools are called, but to call a hospital where critically ill persons and new-born babies are involved is unpardonable. The trouble is that these threats are almost always a hoax, as this was one, but responsible authorities cannot take the chance. Holy Rosary Hospital in Ontario received a similar threat last summer, requiring the same efforts and danger to patients that we experienced here Tuesday.

Two other cases of a "sick mind" came close to home last week. We lost our "Happy Farmer", Clarence Niccum, when a maniac stabbed him to death on a bus while he was on a vacation trip in the deep South. Niccum's assailant had reportedly served time in a mental hospital several times and had been released.

North of here in the New Meadows area a mentally deranged person abducted a 14-year old girl, and involved hundreds of persons in a man-hunt lasting several days. As a result, Bill Acker, McCall police chief for the past 11 years died of a heart attack, and a Caldwell man is in serious condition from gunshot wounds.

It's useless and futile to lament the fact that these sick people are out free in society, and perhaps the only thing we can do is to be as alert as possible to the fact and conduct "disaster drills". And then we have people who are insisting that we should be more lenient with criminals, abolish capital punishment, and relax our moral and social codes.

The one and only good that comes from these senseless episodes is to know that many people can be counted upon to help when needed. Volunteers searching the forests in bitter cold for an armed abductor, or evacuating hospital patients as the result of a bomb threat are just two good examples.

SEEDS FROM THE SOWER

By Michael A. Guido, Metter, Georgia

It was a dark and stormy night, and a chaplain was counselling a soldier in a poorly lighted railroad station. Turning in the Bible to John 3:16, he urged, "Read it." The soldier squinted and read, "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son."

"That would have made a difference," admitted the boy.

"It is that way with the Lord," said the pastor. "So He has given us the Bible, like your father's letters; and His house where we can meet and talk about Him."

"I need these reminders," replied the boy. "Don't we all!"
