Dr. Dawson, who has a $13,500 grant, uses a powerful magnifying glass to study tissue in his leukemia-related research.

Public Power Council Selects Nuclear Sites

The Public Power Council has pinpointed the location for 20 Northwest nuclear power plant sites that would fulfill the region's publicly-owned utilities' forecasted power demands to the year 2000. The potential sites were selected at the conclusion of a nearly nine-month study called for by the Public Power Council and conducted by Dames & Moore, international consultants in the earth sciences. Nuclear plants at these sites would produce approximately 22 million kilowatts of electricity, equal to slightly more than the present total generating capacity of the entire Pacific Northwest region.

Alan Jones, chairman of the Public Power Council, said, "With the exception of making the exact potential sites public, the entire report is open to public inspection." "The future of our energy requirements is so critical we must delay no longer in entering into additional dialogue with all persons concerned with energy sources in our region," Jones said.

The Public Power Council is the power planning arm of the 104 public, municipal and cooperative electric utilities in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, western Montana and part of Wyoming.

One of the 20 sites recommended in the report of Dames & Moore has already been announced, that of Washington Public Power Supply System No. 3, at Satsop, Washington, near the port city of Aberdeen. That plant is scheduled to become operational in September 1981.

Jones said four other of the proposed sites are in western Washington, five in eastern Washington and the other ten at locations in Oregon and Idaho.

The proposed sites are primarily for development and sponsorship by the consumer-owned utilities in the region. "To meet our energy requirements by the year 2000 other generating facilities must be developed," Jones said. He indicated investor-owned utilities also will develop additional generation during the period and that the region can expect completion of hydro-electric projects already begun and by the addition of generators to existing facilities already approved, to add 5 million kilowatts of more.

"We consider nuclear plants to be the primary source of future Northwest electrical generation, from an environmental standpoint, fuel availability and from the economic requirements," Jones continued. The Dames & Moore study that resulted in today's report concerns itself with locating conventional nuclear power plant. Major criteria considered in selecting sites included 1. Environmental impact, 2. Geologic stability, 3. Cooling water supply, and 4. Location in relationship to transmission lines and areas of heavy power use.

It was necessary to equate other criteria in proving potential sites, Jones said, including anticipated public acceptance, existing and anticipated environmental parameters, state and federal licensing and approval and land acquisition.

Major siting areas listed are:

1. Several major river drainage basins in western Washington.
2. Areas along the Strait of Juan de Fuca.
3. The Columbia River and its larger tributaries in the states of Washington and Oregon.
4. The Snake River and its larger tributaries in Washington, Oregon and Idaho.
5. The Pend Oreille River in Washington and Idaho.
6. The Kootenai River in Idaho and Montana.
7. The Clark Fork River, primarily in Montana.
8. The Willamette River and its larger tributaries in Oregon.
9. The Pacific Ocean and the larger coastal streams in Oregon.

YOUR LAWN

If the grass always seems greener on the other side of the fence, then now is a good time to think about reseeding and fertilizing your lawn. The best of the various grass seeds, Merion Bluegrass, has many more seeds per pound than most varieties, so don't waste it. One pound of straight Merion will seed an area of about 750 square feet.

Mixtures have become popular because their cost is less. However, when Merion is used predominantly in mixtures, and maintained well, its strength will ultimately crowd out the other grasses. To prepare a lawn for reseeding, apply weed killers at least two weeks ahead of planting. Open up compacted areas to a depth of six inches with an aerating tool or ordinary spading fork.

Malheur County Pride Day Scheduled Saturday

Showing pride in Malheur County is the purpose of Pride Day '73, scheduled for April 28th. This day has been proclaimed by the Malheur County Youth and the County Court as a day for all citizens to enhance the natural beauty of the county by cleaning up and fixing up their residences, businesses and properties. Projects being planned are massive clean-up campaigns of Vale, Ontario and Annex, construction of entry signs into the county, clean-up of roadside litter, developing weedy lots into horse club practice arenas and litter patrols around public parks and buildings. Many other projects are also being planned for every community of Malheur County.

4-H Empire Builder Pride Day Chairman, Bill Moore, stated that 4-H Empire Builders will be available in Ontario Saturday morning 9:00 a.m. to 12:00, to assist residents with clean-up projects by hauling away debris. In the afternoon 1:00 to 4:00 they will be available in Vale.

A picnic for all Pride Day participants will be held at the Vale Park at 4:00 p.m. Jan Ingle, Ontario, picnic

NHS FASHION '73 SLATED FOR MAY 1

"Fashion '73" will be the theme for this year's Homemaking Fashion Show. Nyssa Chapter of the Future Homemaker of America will sponsor the annual fashion show for the community May 1 at 8 p.m. in the multi-purpose room.

FHA members and homemaking students will model garments they have made since the beginning of the year. Coats and other tailored garments will be modeled by third year homemaking students. Rosie Alonzo and Leann Bair will model their maxi coats; Dana Fredriksen, her double breasted coat; Diana Show, a cotton corduroy car coat. Pants suits will be worn by MaryAnn Estrada and Shelley Munn. Carol Nelson will wear her jumpsuit and ski jacket while Trish Wahlert will be seen in a mid-length cape.

Mrs. Mike Kodama, aide in the homemaking classes, has been the script coordinator this year.

Decorations from the Junior-Senior Prom will be used. FHA members and the Homemaking classes will prepare the refreshments.
