COUPON CLIPPING. Redeeming grocery coupons can help to cut food costs--if you use them wisely. Some shoppers are finding they can collect $3 to $5 a month from coupon clipping and box-top saving. Obviously, you won't save if coupons tempt you to buy unnecessary groceries or more expensive foods than you normally would. But alert collectors can find coupons for staples such as flour, sugar, bread, cereals, and brand-name vegetables as well as convenience foods.

Organize your coupons before you go to the store, eliminating any with expired dates. Trade coupons with friends. Watch for coupons on the food pages of newspapers and magazines, on packages, and even in the package contents.
