There are studies which reveal that your well-trained family physician, with adequate hospital, laboratory, and consultation services, can and does care for approximately 85-90% of all conditions in their communities. Your doctor is working 60 to 80 hours a week and not until he reaches the age of 65 does his work fall below the accepted normal of 40 hours, Those extra hours are inevitably subtracted from his leisure, hobbies, sleep and his enjoyment with his family. The practice of medicine is not a life of undue sacrifice, nor is it one of high income for a short working week. It is a life of devotion to sick people and their families, and responsibility to the individual, the community, the hospital and the profession
