NEWS OF HEALTH

Good News For Aged

People are living longer and have more leisure time to enjoy the activities so often put off during the rush of year spent at raising families and full-time jobs.

But in later years many people have less physical stamina. They may suffer a loss of appetite and withdrawal from the very activities they now have time for.

These symptoms may be partially due to a depletion of vitamin-mineral stores.

To deal with this situation, scientists have come up with a wealth of products. One, for instance, helps people make the most of foods they eat to help renew vitality. It may spark the appetite, particularly when taken before meals.

In cases of marginal vitamin-mineral shortages, it helps supplement the diet. Interesting, too, to motivate people to take the liquid regularly, it has a tasty sherry wine base.

Wisely, doctors know that even this vitamin-mineral supplement called Gevabron is not a total answer. But with such supplements, plus the psychological stimulation of friends who encourage activity, the extra years and leisure people have can mean a lot of extra pleasure.
