Charles Bowers Celebrates 90th

Charles Bowers celebrated his 90th birthday, August 31, 1973.

Charles was born in Missouri, in the Springfield area in 1883. He grew up there. Much of his early life was spent in the manner of the early pioneers. There was a large family, so he had many cousins, nephews, aunts and uncles close by. He roamed the woods with his dogs, hunting, fishing, trapping animals for their fur and for meat for the table. Later on he had a rifle and shotgun. He became an expert shot with both.

There was fox hunting, with the dogs at night, card playing, moonshine and fiddle playing. Charlie learned the tunes and played for dances all his life till coming to Oregon.

He married young and left Missouri for the farming lands of Central Nebraska. There his "way of life," continued, although a successful farmer. There were young rabbits, squirrel, prairie chicken and pheasant for the table with once in a while a deer. There were plenty of other meat, but wild game tasted better.

His wife died in 1933. His five children were grown. He married a young widow with six boys. It was the depth of the depression and drought.

Gradually, everything went, livestock, food and property. In 1938, he again ventured west, this time to Oregon. There was plenty of work and the pay was good but it was hard for a man of 54 years. He brought his little family out and set to work making a living with his bare hands and a hoe.

As he became acquainted, life became easier, his second family of five in school, his stepsons off to the war. But there was no time or inclination for the life of a fiddle player—gradually the tunes slipped away.

He worked in the sugar factory till he was 72—each fall his age recorded 65.

He is still active—cutting weeds and keeping his little place on the Owyhee neat and trim.

The river still runs by, but he picks up his fishing pole and lays it down again. It's too far to the river.

A salute to a member of our pioneers.
