You can't can electricity

... but it's just common sense to conserve it!

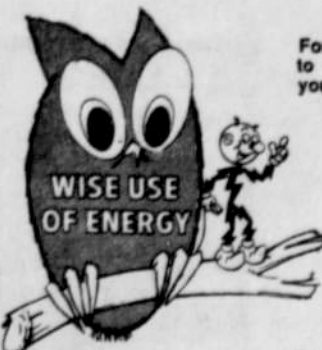

You can't stash away electricity by the jarful like Aunt Maudie's apricots, but there will be more for all of us, as we need it, if we use it wisely. Since heating consumes the largest share of energy used in your home, here are some practical heat conserving suggestions:

Save what you can

FIREPLACES CAN COOL YOU! Continuous air circulation up a fireplace chimney, whether in use or not, can drain heat from a home. So close the damper when the fireplace is cold. Burning indoor oxygen can decrease air pressure within the home, thus increasing infiltration of outside air. A pipe to bring outside air into the firebox can be most helpful, as can a glass screen.

HEAT STRAPPED? WEATHERSTRIP! Most homes change air once an hour; drafty, loose-fitting homes twice an hour. Thorough weatherstripping and caulking can slow down air change to once every two hours for substantial savings in heating costs.

CONCRETE FLOORS CAN CHILL YOU! Perimeter insulation of cement floors can add comfort while reducing heating load. Dig an 18-inch-deep trench around the outside of the slab. Then install rigid foam insulation at least one inch thick, or equal quality weatherproof insulation. Then refill the trench to hold it in place.
