Idaho Seeks Amtrak Funds

Governor Cecil D. Andrus has released a letter from Amtrak Vice-President R. C. Moot which apparently closes the door on the possibility of train service for Southern Idaho this year.

At the same time, however, the Governor announced he has requested the Pacific Northwest Regional Commission, of which he is chairman, to launch a study of the feasibility of the Commission possibly picking up two-thirds of the deficit incurred by Amtrak in operating rail passenger service from Seattle to Kansas City via Southern Idaho and Denver, if the amount is not too prohibitive.

While I am of course disappointed that Amtrak chose to award this year's experimental route to another region, I am hopeful that the Pacific Northwest Regional Commission's study will show the feasibility of finding funds which could match two-thirds of the deficit Amtrak might incur in running the Seattle through Southern Idaho to Kansas City route. I have asked the PNR to study carefully all of the ramifications of this possibility and report to me as soon as possible." Governor Andrus said.
