Easter Cantata Sunday Evening At TVCC

"Christ lay in bonds of death," an Easter cantata by J. S. Bach, and "The Peaseable Kingdom" by Randall Thompson will be presented this Sunday evening, April 7, by the Treasure Valley Chorus. The program is being presented by the music department at Treasure Valley Community College in cooperation with many churches and individuals in the community and will begin at 8:15 p.m., in the Treasure Valley Community College Gym.

According to Dick Dalzell, director of music at Treasure Valley Community College and conductor for the program, the two works are both exceptionally appropriate for this time of year. They are highly contrasted in musical style and form. Each lasts approximately one half hour and there will be a short intermission between them.

A cantata is a sacred work meant to be sung in church and consisting of contrasting sections for solos, duets, ensembles of various voicings, and chorus with instrumental, usually orchestral, accompaniment. It is similar to the much larger and longer oratorio, like "Elijah" which was presented last year. The cantata usually comments on the same text as the sermon for the day. Bach wrote approximately 295 church cantatas and this is one of the finest and best known of them.

This cantata consists of eight movements—an opening sinfonia and seven movements built upon the seven verses of the text by Martin Luther. These are arranged in a unique symmetrically balanced order: chorus, duet, solo, quartet, solo, duet, chorus. Each is in the same key (E minor), and with one exception the same meter, and each is a variation on the basic chorale melody. The manner in which Bach achieves such great variety within these limitations and really develops the message of the text in his music is moving.

Several outstanding soloists from our own area, all members of Treasure Valley Chorus, will be featured. They are: sopranos, Sue Dalzell, Ontario, and Yvonne Stephens, Weiser; alto, Pat Imel, Ontario; tenors, John Greif, Payette, and Robert Wallace, Ontario; bass, Jeff Sandburg, Nyssa.
