The staff of the Oregon Wildlife Commission will recommend opening dates for major 1975 hunting seasons mostly similar to those held in 1974, according to Wildlife Division Chief Bob Mace. The Commission will hold a public hearing and meeting to set the opening dates at its Portland headquarters beginning at 10 a.m. on Friday, January 10.

The Rocky Mountain elk season would be the only significant change, with a recommended opening date one week later than this year. Other seasons would be adjusted by one day to make them fall on Saturday. The staff recommendations would then call for an October 4 opening for the general deer season, November 1 for Rocky Mountain elk, and November 15 for Roosevelt elk season.

Antelope season would open on August 16 and the early archery seasons on August 23.

Chukar season would again open concurrent with the deer season on October 4 and the pheasant season would begin on October 18. Season length, bag limits, and other regulations for these and all other hunting seasons will be set later in the year after the necessary biological data are accumulated in the field.

Hunting Season Opening Date Recommendations

The Commission now follows a policy of setting the opening dates for these seasons as early in the year as possible as an aid to hunters who wish to plan their vacations around a hunting trip. It should be emphasized that these are staff recommendations developed in consultation with field biologists, but the Commission will also consider recommendations from the public before the actual dates are set.

All interested parties are welcome to present their views on opening dates to the Commission at the public hearing or they may be submitted in writing prior to the hearing. Comments should be addressed to the Oregon Wildlife Commission, P. O. box 3503, Portland, Oregon 97208.

Burglar Has Sweet Tooth

Nyssa Police Officers reported a burglary at the 5-an Ray Dairy sometime after midnight on Christmas Eve. A door on the north side of the building was pried open and eight 10-pound bags of sugar were taken, according to Jay Bunn who is the owner operator of the store.
