Your County Agent Says

Cereal grain trials at the Malheur Experiment Station have identified several varieties that produce outstanding yields in this area.

Two spring wheats that outyield the older Federation and Lemhi varieties are Twin and Springfield. These grains have shorter straw height, show less tendency to lodge and have produced more bushels per acre than the former favorites.

A new barley variety that originated in Washington state promises to replace the standard Vale 70. The new grain is named Steptoe. It outyielded Vale 70 in station tests but does have a tendency to lodge more when excessive rates of nitrogen fertilizer are applied.

Spring oat varieties proven best in the lower irrigated sections of Malheur County include Park and Cayuse.
