Teach Children To Save Energy

Almost everyone is trying to save energy, but you haven't done all you can until you train your children to do the same!

An article in Inter/Face, the employee newspaper for Jersey Central Power and Light, offered suggestions for making your children energy-conscious.

• Call a family meeting and discuss the problem. Dramatize it by displaying your utility bills for recent months.

• Try simple arithmetic. One 100-watt bulb burning for 10 hours uses one kilowatt hour of electricity and costs about three cents. If the children were "docked"—the value of wasted electricity deducted from their allowance—they might quickly learn that energy awareness is a good thing!

• You might try a Wise Use Reward such as an increase in allowance for observing good energy management principles.

• If overlong showers are a problem, try setting a time limit on them.

• Most children need to be broken of the habit of standing for minutes at a time in front of open refrigerators or freezers trying to decide on a snack.

Teaching children wise energy use makes better future consumers of them, as well as helping you and your utility companies!

'Sleep Cheats' Risk Safety

Are you a sleep cheat? Many Americans are.

"Sleep cheats" are people with a late-to-bed pattern which results in sustained sleep shortage. According to an article in Electric News, the employee magazine of New Orleans Public Service Inc., all sleep cheats suffer some health impairment.

The signs of chronic sleep shortage, in the order in which they appear, are:

- Poor timing and muscular control.
- Strained vision with objects shifting in size and shape.
- Impaired hearing and reduced sense of touch, temperature and pressure.
- Increased irritability and depression.

Eventually, collapse from sleep exhaustion can occur. So work out your sleep needs over a stretch of several weeks. Your safety on and off the job may depend on it!

On July 6, 1975, at the Second Continental Congress, Thomas Jefferson and John Dickinson wrote the "Declaration of the Causes and Necessity of Taking Up Arms."
