Parks To Conduct Interviews

If you are visiting Oregon State Parks this summer, you may be one of 45,000 people asked to give your opinion on the adequacy of State Park facilities.

David Talbot, State Parks Superintendent, announced today that the Parks Branch will be conducting interviews at 36 State Parks throughout Oregon during the remaining summer months of July and August. The interviews are designed to gather information on the origin of park visitors, how long they plan to stay, and what activities they participate in while visiting the State Park.

Talbot stated that the Parks Branch is continually working to improve park programs, and needs to know how visitors are reacting to the present level of park services and facilities. Talbot says, "it is highly important that planning, design, development, and operation of State Parks be related in a most positive way to people and their recreational needs and interests."

The State Parks Visitor Survey has been conducted on two previous occasions, in 1964 and 1969. According to Talbot, answers received from the public have had a direct bearing on State policy concerning acquisition, development, and operation of the park system. From examination of survey data, he said, "park planners can better interpret visitor-activity patterns, recreation and leisure time preferences, Bob Wilson picked up five more wins while dropping a game to Ray Norland.

Father Simard copped six wins in a busy schedule of eight games to crowd into third place with Red McCrady who was idle. McCrady held his percentage position while Ralph Werner slid down when he split a four-game evening with Wilson and Sager.

Playing make-up games in addition to his regular schedule, Henry Anderson took on 12 games in his first outing, winning 7 of them to get into contention.

Last year's threat Gene Chester bombed home with eight wins to climb into second spot on the ladder during one evening's play. LaVern Cleaver inched further up the ladder with 3 wins while Dave Waldo held his percentage position with two more wins.

Residents See Apollo Blast-Off

Two Nyssa residents, Mrs. Adriana Kunkel and her son John, got a first-hand look at history in the making last week when they were in Cape Canaveral, Florida, with a Boise State University group to eyewitness America's Apollo craft blast into space toward its meeting with Russia's Soyuz.

The blast-off climaxed four days of educational activities for the 96 people who were in BSU's "classroom in the sky" workshop. The class, worth Boise State academic credit, was organized especially to study the Apollo mission.

While at Cape Canaveral the Kunkels heard talks from space experts and toured the Kennedy Space Center. Closer to launch time, they were given detailed information about the mission by scientists who had experiments on the flight.

Another highlight of the trip was a talk by rocket pioneer Dr. Werner Von Braun.

Tour leader Tom Campbell said the group had an "excellent" view of the launch from the Kennedy Space Center. He noted that NASA scientists were "very excited" about the American-Russian docking. The political aspects of the venture were played down and NASA officials expected many scientific benefits from the flight, he commented.

Campbell, who also led a BSU group to see the Skylab project two years ago, said there was more enthusiasm for the Apollo launch. "A lot more people watched and cheered than at the Skylab blast-off," he noted.

The group left July 11 and returned by United Airlines charter July 16.

Campbell said the group was a good cross-section of students and teachers representing four Western states, as well as Idaho.

While on the trip, Mrs. Kunkel and John visited both Disney World and Sea World near Orlando, Florida.

PROJECT INDEPENDENCE

Energy Independence begins at home

America's independence from foreign energy sources begins at home — your home.

It all depends on how conscientious each of us is about things like insulation, weatherstripping and caulking our homes and practicing wise energy use in our daily lives.

The Federal Energy Administration says cooling and heating homes consumes about 11 percent of all the energy the United States uses in a year.

According to the same agency, insulation can increase temperature-control efficiency for heating and cooling by as much as 20 to 30 percent. Caulking and weatherstripping can reduce a family's energy consumption by 10 percent or more.

Call Idaho Power for help in getting greater energy efficiency in your home. One of our Energy Advisers will be glad to visit your home (or your place of business) and suggest ways you can make the energy you use go further. His advice is free.
