More Fiscal Responsibility Needed

If ever a second American Revolution was needed, it will be in our forthcoming election year, which also happens to be our 200th birthday year.

The new revolution doesn't have to be as bloody as our first, but it must be fought with just as much militancy and patriotism—at the ballot box. The objective must be to remove from office those elected officials who have placed such mammoth power, control and authority in the hands of government that the powers held by King George 200 years ago were small by comparison.

Money by the billions is being spent by the bureaucracy in Washington without the consent, approval, or even the knowledge of the governed. Indeed, most Congressmen will admit that they cannot begin to keep track of even a small portion of the Federal budget. Yet it is they, the Members of Congress, who have voted into being the countless bureaus, commissions, agencies, and authorities with hundreds of thousands of highly paid employees.

The need is just as critical at the state level. The Association of Oregon Industries pointed out to Oregon publishers at our annual meeting recently that in the last legislature 22 members of that body do not believe in the free enterprise system. Whether there are actually 22 we don't know for sure, but we do know that by their actions our present legislature is not fiscally responsible.

A new organization has been organized in Oregon called Oregonians for Free Enterprise, Inc., with offices in Salem.

OFFE was founded to seek and support state legislative candidates who believe that fiscal responsibility in government is a requisite to satisfactory public service. Concentrating on state legislative races, OFFE is non-partisan and is more concerned with a candidate's economic philosophy rather than his partisan politics.

Until we get people in the state legislatures and in the national Congress who believe in fiscal responsibility, who believe in the free enterprise system, and who are dedicated to preserving the remaining freedom of individuals, we are doomed to insolvency.

Right now, for instance, some members of Congress feel that consumers' interests are not being sufficiently protected. Rather than improving the existing structure, they propose to pass the Agency for Consumer Protection, thus creating another agency.

Consumer protection programs have forced business to spend billions of dollars to comply with federal regulations. Business initially pays these unproductive costs, but more and more consumers realize that they are paying in the end in the form of higher prices, inflation and unemployment.

The next election, in 1976, should be the time when we elect to state and federal offices, those who believe that our whole survival depends on free enterprise, less governmental regulations, and more fiscal responsibility.
