We've slept in a different bed every night since I started painting. George gets a headache if he breaths too much paint fumes. Last night we slept in the living room, and in the morning we lay and watched the sunlight spread through the trees in the east.

The poodles have their own little wicker bed wherever we go. Maybe tonight we'll return to our original beds... I certify that the statements made by me above are correct and complete. Dirick E. Nedry, Editor Published October 2, 1975.
