40 YEARS AGO

Several years ago the Nyssa section was known as a leading beet producing section, with beets doing exceptionally well in this soil and climate. However the white fly pest became bad in this section, just as it did in many other sections, and farmers suffered more and more each year from blight. Consequently, as the crop became more and more of a hazard, beet growing almost went out of existence here. The past summer, Ernest Zesiger, E. L. Zesiger and Clifford Snyder had an experience in raising beets that should be of interest to every farmer in Malheur County. According to Mr. Zesiger, they were almost discouraged by their neighbors last spring in their decision to raise some beets this summer. However, they had raised them in other sections for many years and felt that the Nyssa section was ideal for the production of this crop. They rented land from Mr. Overstreet and Mrs. Beckley, giving the owner one-fourth as his share of the crop. Beets planted were blight resisting, a new variety developed by the sugar company. During the summer, they found that beet raising required close attention to thinning, hoeing, cultivating, and watering. There is not time for long rests. People would call at the house and ask what they were going to do with all that spinach. Sugar beet raising being such a novelty to many newcomers, they were the subject of many jokes. The returns they made on their experiment was no joke, and from the way they are topping out, it is believed they will average at least 20 tons to the acre. The beets were loaded at Adrian, weighed in at Nampa and then sent to the Sugar Factory at Burley, Idaho. The company paid them $7 a ton, with 75c deducted for freight, making a net return of $6.25 a ton. Ernest Zesiger has had considerable experience in beet growing and has kindly offered to furnish any information he can to farmers interested in beets as a crop next year. Issues for 50 and 60 years ago are missing from our files.

Radial Tires No Substitute

Contrary to the impression of many motorists, radial tires are no substitute for snow tires for winter driving, according to new findings released today by the National Safety Council.

Reporting on tests conducted by the Council's Committee on Winter Driving Hazards at Stevens Point, Wisconsin, Ray Prince, the committee secretary, said, "These tests show that snow tires provide more traction over a reasonably wide range of snow-covered road conditions than conventional radial tires that do not have a snow tread."

He added that the range of performance of the radial tires was quite broad, in some cases exceeding but in some cases even poorer than some conventional highway tires.

In these tests, seven brands of radial tires were compared with bias belted highway tires and bias belted snow tires. Both peak and spinning traction were measured with the vehicle standing still and also moving forward at a speed of 5 mph. Snow conditions ranged from approximately one inch of medium packed snow to as much as eight inches of loose snow.

In an earlier test program, according to Prince, the Committee found that radial tires offered no advantage over conventional tires in either stopping, traction or cornering performance on glare ice.

Prince said that the current snow tests were undertaken to help municipalities decide whether to modify their snow ordinances to permit radial tires in lieu of snow tires.

"Considering the outcome of these tests and earlier findings by the Council, it is obvious that conventional radial tires (without a snow tread) are not a substitute for snow tires," he concluded. "Motorists should still be advised to use snow tires for mid-to-medium snow and ice conditions and to use reinforced tire chains for severe snow and ice conditions."

Summarizing the Council's previous test findings, Prince said that conventional snow tires provide only a small improvement in pulling ability on glare ice although they produce half again as much pulling ability as regular tires in loosely packed snow. Studded tires are appreciably more effective on ice, giving about three times the pull of regular tires. And reinforced tire chains provide from four to seven times the pulling ability of regular tires on snow and ice.

Activities in Arcadia

ARCADIA - Mr. and Mrs. Ray Deister of Grants Pass, Oregon, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Bowers, left for their home Tuesday morning. They will spend the winter at the Fountain of Youth Spa near Hyland, California.
