Agricultural Employers Not Aware of Law

Information bulletin number one (1), "Employing The Minor," issued by the Oregon Bureau of Labor, is lacking in some essential details and is confusing agricultural employers, says Waldron Johnson, president of the Oregon Farm Bureau Federation.

According to Johnson many agricultural employers are not aware that they must file an employer's certificate with the Bureau when they hire a minor (anyone under 18 years of age). Also, they must maintain a current list of minor employees.

In the minimum wage section of the bulletin, it is not made clear that the minimum hourly wage for all agricultural employes working 500 man-hours or more each quarter is $2.00, not $2.30. This minimum holds both for minors and those over 18.

There is no overtime limit for minors in agricultural work, says Johnson. The bulletin does not include this point. Agricultural employes need not obtain a special overtime permit from the Bureau of Labor.

Johnson says he does not know if the Bureau of Labor plans to correct the bulletin, or issue a special one for agricultural employes.

Your County Agent Says

Intensive cropping systems produce too little crop residues. They demand heavier tillage, which opens the soil for air to dry out soil, but they do not return much to the organic bank account.

Many farmers no longer use cover crops or produce hay and livestock manure. Some don't even grow corn which produces good residue. Other bale and sell their small grain straw. And certain crops, such as beans and sugar beets, produce small residues, anyway.

We can maintain and improve organic matter. Begin with crop residues—then use green manure and cover crops where possible to stop accelerated soil erosion by wind and water.

Use livestock manure as a soil amendment. Include in the rotation at least one crop which produces large amounts of crop residues. Corn is fine. Control insects, diseases and weeds for best grain and residue yields.

The best prescription for poor soil tilth is a deep-rooted legume mixed with a grass for two or more years. The grass stabilizes the structure of the top-soil. The deep-rooted legume improves the structure of the subsoil.

And to do their job right, these residue-building, structure-improving crops must be well fertilized. The beneficiary is the human race. For without good soil tilth, our species, could disappear in an alarmingly short time.
