Another salute to our nation's Bicentennial will be a Home Arts Festival that will be held Saturday, March 6 in Ontario, reports Helen Conner, Extension Home Economist for Malheur County.

The Home Arts Festival will feature special lessons and demonstrations that will teach various handwork skills that have been "lost" through the years. Some sessions will also include inexpensive decorating ideas. Activities will go on throughout the day.

The event is open to the general public, pre-registration is required for five of the topics. These are all introductory sessions for beginners, and include Tole Painting, Bargello Stitchery, Macrame, Creative Stitchery and Weaving. Classes will be limited in enrollment. There will be a small charge for these classes or participants will be asked to bring materials so they can actually learn the skill. Many other activities are planned throughout the day. These do not require pre-registration.

Included will be local resource people who will demonstrate or teach others how to make various types of rugs, quilting, crochet and needlepoint. Films on wallpapering and furniture refinishing will be shown throughout the day. Two local homemakers Lee McBride, Ontario and Charlie Scott, Vale are preparing a slide show and demonstration on creative low cost decorating. They will include tips on making lamps, framing pictures and many other ideas. Vi Rexford, Gem County Agent, will present decorating with fabrics. It will include techniques for batik and tie dye and other suggestions for using fabrics in creative ways.

A complete schedule of activities will be announced later. Registration sheets for the five classes are available at the Malheur County Extension Office 889-9129 and at local needle work shops and must be returned in by February 27.
