U I Architecture Student Wins Reynolds Prize

University of Idaho sophomore architecture student Reggie L. Grasmick has been named as a regional winner of the 1975 annual Reynolds Aluminum Prize for architectural students.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Grasmick, Parma, the 19-year-old student won the student competition at UI with an aluminum modular plumbing fixture system design for the handicapped.

The student prize, administered by the American Institute of Architects, is a $300 check from Reynolds offered for the best original architectural design in which the creative use of aluminum is a major factor. The national competition was established by Reynolds Metals Co. to encourage creativity in architectural design and to stimulate interest in the design potential of aluminum.

Grasmick's design, along with those winners from other participating schools of architecture, were entered in the national competition for the Reynolds national student architectural prize of $5,000. The national winner, soon to be announced, will share the prize money equally with his or her school of architecture.

7th Graders Enjoy Outing

On Wednesday, the 12th of May, approximately 72 students from Mr. Ballou's 7th grade Science classes went to Sniveley's hot springs on the Owyhee River.

Mr. Grant Baugh from the BLM showed us plants and helped us classify them. We collected about 17 different plants and named them all. After we collected our plants we ate and went swimming and hiking.

We would like to thank Mr. Grant Baugh, Mrs. Ballou, Mrs. Lau, and Mrs. Alexander for helping us with the plants and Mrs. Haney and Mrs. Glascock for driving the buses.

Sincerely,
Mr. Ballou's 7th grade Science Class.
