Planning Commission To Study Land Use

Members of the Citizens Committee for Involvement will meet on Monday, June 21, at 7:30 p.m. in the City Council Chambers with a special committee appointed by Planning Commission chairman, Carl Burningham, to study land use and make zoning changes to the planning commission. Under the Land Conservation and Development Commission goals, each city is required to provide zoning in consonance with county zones in the proposed development area. The CCI has arbitrarily selected an area of one thousand feet around the perimeter of Nyssa as the study area. In striving to create zones which agree with county zones, consideration must be given to soil conditions, agricultural suitability, present city and county zones as well as the city's ability to logistically support the area in question. In appointing the present task force, Chairman Burningham felt a presentation should be made, one on each zone to be considered, with one member assisting in the basic research and making the presentation. During the meeting, Joe Seward, Auxiliary Planning Commission member, will provide a presentation on an R-1 zone. Definitions were initially drafted for an R-1 zone to meet general LCDC requirements; however, no actual R-1 zone exists in Nyssa. After presentations are made for each of the proposed zones, a Town Hall Public Hearing will be scheduled to determine which zones should be recommended to the City Council for adoption. All persons interested in land use and zoning are invited to the present action.
