Make It Yourself Wool Contest

Young people from Malheur, Harney, Grant and Baker counties have been invited to enter the "Make It Yourself With Wool" contest in Ontario, November 13 on the campus of Treasure Valley Community College.

There are three divisions in Oregon: pre-teen (10-13); junior (14-16); and senior (17-21). A winner will be chosen in each division with the junior and senior winners earning an expense paid trip to Portland to the Oregon state contest in December. A winner will be chosen there to represent Oregon in National competition January 18 in Monterey, California.

A variety of local, state and national prizes await the winners with special gifts for those winners using 100 percent wool fabrics or yarns. Rules require that the materials used be at least 70 percent wool of loomed, knitted or felted fabric.

Entry blanks and rules are available at most county extension offices, home economics teachers, or from Mrs. C. W. Moore, Route 1, Box 215, Vale, or from Mrs. Phil Rumpel, also Vale, Oregon.

The entries should be completed and returned to addresses listed in the entry form so plans can be completed for the contest.

Mrs. Moore, District 12 chairman of the Oregon contest, said "Make It Yourself With Wool" is more than just a sewing, knitting or crocheting contest. It is a fashion competition. Judges look for coordination of the fabric to the pattern, poise, and presentation, suitability of the garment to the contestant's age and way of life, as well as skill in sewing, knitting or crocheting."

Garments will be judged first on the contestants in the morning by judges competent in the clothing field, then items will be judged for construction and durability. A public style review is planned for 2 p.m.

Deer Season Fast Approaching

With general deer season a few fleeting weeks away, many sportsmen are making their first serious plans for this fall.

Those who have not yet purchased a deer tag are reminded that a decision must be made whether to hunt western Oregon or east of the Cascades. The deer tag will be valid in one general season this year or the other, not both.

Those who have already purchased a tag but who may be having second thoughts are reminded that a tag may be exchanged at the Department of Fish and Wildlife Portland office or any of its six regional offices prior to October 2 for a fee of $1.

Mule deer hunters will find deer populations improved in some areas but still in low numbers in others. The season is a little longer this year, including two weekends and ending on a Wednesday, so the option is open to hunt the second weekend to avoid opening day pressure as many hunters prefer to do in eastern Oregon.

In three management units in southeast Oregon—Whitehorse, Beatys Butte, and Steens—there will again be a 4-point regulation in effect. Only bucks with at least four points on one antler, not including the brow tine, are legal.

An error in an earlier Department of Fish and Wildlife news release indicated half of the Whitehorse Unit would be closed to deer hunting in 1976. The closure was considered by the Commission at its regulations meeting, but not adopted.

The 4-point regulation was new last year but, in spite of the protection afforded younger bucks last year, hunters should not expect a very noticeable increase in 4-point bucks this year.

Southeast Oregon is a great place for the hunter who doesn't mind working hard and who likes solitude but mule deer populations throughout the desert country in general have been slower to recover than elsewhere in eastern Oregon.

Although "doe" permits have been authorized in 12 eastern Oregon units and one agricultural damage area, these permits do not become valid until October 16, several days after the close of the general buck season.

Bucks throughout Oregon must have at least a forked horn to be legal again this year, except in the 4-point area already mentioned.

The boundary between the western Oregon area and eastern Oregon this year follows the crest of the Cascades. Even though black tail deer are found in Hood River and Keno units, these areas are considered part of the eastern Oregon area and must be hunted with a mule deer tag.

These are a few of the highlights and changes in deer hunting regulations for the coming season. Anyone planning to go deer hunting would be well advised to pick up a free copy of the general season game manual regulations booklet available from sporting goods outlets throughout the state. It's a good idea to read the regulations completely and avoid any possibility of a problem.

As in past years, there are a number of areas where vehicle restrictions will be in effect. These are designed to close off the many secondary roads that have been constructed by logging in certain problem areas. The closures provide improved escape avenues for big game in over-roaded areas while improving the quality of hunting.

The closures and their general locations are listed in the regulations booklet. All of those which were in effect last year remain in effect this year. In addition, six new ones will be in effect during the deer season.

Two are in western Oregon. They are the upper Tualatin-Trask area in the Trask Management Unit and the Evans Creek area in the Evans Creek Unit north of Medford. (This one is not listed in the synopsis. It is primarily on private timber company land and was set up after the regulations were published.)

There are four new vehicle restriction areas in eastern Oregon. The Camp Creek area is located in the Northside Unit, the Lone Pine area in Silvies Unit, Marks Creek Burn area in Ochoco Unit, and the Vinegar Hill-Indian Rock area in Desolation Management Unit.

Three of last year's vehicle restriction areas—Applegate Fox Butte, and Rager—have been expanded this year and the Rager area will have a new system of signing. Maps and signs explaining the new system will be posted around the area boundary.
