Balancing Claims

"Only in a free market system is each individual certain of his right to strive and excel for his own material benefit—and therefore for the incidental benefit of his fellow citizens. A progressive and dynamic free society holds these ideals of equality and excellence simultaneously in a creative tension, balancing the claims for sharing against the incentives for striving."

Bill Called Threat to Shopper Rights

The proposed Balanced Growth and Economic Planning Act would "totally disenfranchise" the consumer's right to buy what he wants and would kill the private enterprise system, the president of The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. warned recently.

Richard A. Riley said that the bill's stated intention—to achieve national economic planning—sounds good, "if you believe that the federal government is capable of making your business decisions for you—and we know that the federal government has rarely been able to manage any sizeable enterprise economically."

Eventually, he continued, the government would realize it couldn't meet its unrealistic goals and would begin allocating resources by product line with respect to labor intensity, energy consumption and other factors basic to the manufacturing process.

Nationalization of our critical industries would follow that, Mr. Riley said. This would deprive the consumer of his rights "to shop for price, for quality, for the kinds of goods he desires."
