Start with a sound structure

Lincoln's house in Springfield, Illinois was the only home Abraham Lincoln ever owned. Nevertheless, he equated the strength of the home with the strength of the government when he declared "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

From here, Lincoln emerged from local politics to be counted among the most memorable of presidents. In 1844, this house cost Lincoln $1,500-a year's earnings. Still, it was considered a good buy—only five years old, with a 50 x 152 foot lot, cistern, well, privy, 30 x 13 foot barn, 18 x 20 foot carriage house and many good neighbors. "To this place and the kindness of these people," he said, "I owe everything."

Owning your own home can make a profound difference in your future and your family's. It can mean better jobs...better education...better health and recreation facilities.
