An Old Fashioned Fourth of July

By Kathy Dault

This story has been written by only idea's. This story is not real; but how would we stand under an old fashioned Fourth of July?

Well maybe next year Nyssa can do it, -have lasting memory of a 1978 Fourth of July. This year's doings for the Fourth of July has been canceled due to 'no fireworks.'

"Mom, it's time," BANG! Those were common sounds on the Fourth of July, 65 years ago. Everyone would get up early to listen to the cannon go off at 5 a.m. Then were ready for a big breakfast, to carry them to noon.

Soon time came to go to town where the excitement for the day was. Remember 65 years ago there were not many cars, but, horses and buggies got people to the same places. So everyone loaded the buggy and away they went. Since not many things happened on regular days, holidays were special and usually fun. The kids would start getting excited about traveling time. Winning the sack race or at least leading it for a while appeared in their heads.

The day in town would begin with a parade. Usually Veterans from the Spanish-American War and the Civil War would march in the parade. Along with the pretty floats and pride horse buggies.

With noon just around the corner everyone gathered at the park. Sack lunches were next on the agenda.

A guest speaker was on hand each year to talk to the crowd, from the band shelter. "My daddy saw that man up California way," "Look at those new shoes;" "I bet he's a rich man;" were usually whispers from different individuals from the crowd.

Now it was time in which all the kids were looking forward to "game time." "I'm going to cream you this year," "No your not your not going to even win." Were common sounds before the races. But not only was this time for the kids, but also for the men, with the horseshoes being their game. Soon the sack races, tug-o-wars, three-legged races and all the other games were over.

Time for people who had to travel far, to mosey on homeward. But not many could pass by the red, white and blue miscellaneous stand. Who could pass up candy, popcorn, candy apples or even cotton candy?

But for the ones who could stay in town, the excitement of fireworks were still ahead. Roman candles, sky rockets and many fiery objects, captured the watcher's attention.

Another Fourth of July would soon be over. Only sparklers at home for the little ones were left.

Will there ever be another Fourth of July like that one? Probably not, but the memories will last on forever.
