How can I cut my electric use?

Here's one way: lower the thermostats on your water heater.

Lowering thermostat settings can put a real dent in the amount of energy you use for water heating. Most water heaters have two thermostats. You'll find them behind the removable plates on the front of your heater. On most models, the thermostats can be adjusted by hand or by using a screwdriver. Lower the setting to 120 degrees. That's hot enough for most household uses, although if you have an automatic dishwasher, you may need a somewhat higher temperature. One note of caution: be sure you shut off the electricity to the heater before adjusting. For more energy-saving ideas, call your local Idaho Power office and talk to an energy adviser.
