MONARCHS AS ORATORS

In our democratic age it is becoming more and more necessary that princes and kings should have something to say and know how to say it. The speeches of European rulers are scanned with the closest scrutiny, for, although "the king's mouth" no longer orders peace or war, men are prone to look to their words for an index of the trend of events.

peror is shy of speaking. He seeks to avoid all functions where a speech is expected. He memorizes his addresses after they are written for him in large letters on sheets of white foolscap. King Humbert has an excellent voice, but is a most indifferent speaker.

SERIOUS TROUBLE AMONG SUFFRAGISTS.

Mrs. Blake's Followers Say That She Was Beaten by the Personal Efforts of Aunt Susan. New York, February 20.—There is every likelihood of a division in the National Woman Suffrage Association. The election at the annual convention in Washington last week of Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt as president has aroused a strong feeling throughout the country among the friends of Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, who was also a candidate for the office, and who, it was said, was defeated through the personal opposition of the retiring president, Miss Susan B. Anthony.

MONROE DOCTRINE FOR ASIA.

The following editorial article from the Philadelphia Times of February 23d refers to a matter of peculiar interest to the people of the Pacific coast. In order to give opportunity for a study of the address to which the editorial article refers, we print it on another page of this issue: "Those who will read the modest, wise and witty address of the Chinese minister, Wu Ting Fang, before the students and faculty of the University yesterday, will come to the conclusion that the Chinese government, however conservative and behind this progressive age it may be in other matters, adopts the very sensible up-to-date policy of selecting trained statesmen as foreign ambassadors. A more timely, comprehensive and appropriate address for the occasion could not have been made by the foremost statesman of our own country, and the fact that it was made by the Chinese minister shows that he has studied the history and institutions of the United States to excellent purpose.

Mr. Winston Churchill's detailed story of his daring escape from Pretoria and his subsequent adventures fills three columns of the London Morning Post, and is a vivid piece of writing. On the night of December 12th he had arranged to escape from the Model Schools with another officer. "Tuesday, the twelfth (He writes.) Night came again. Again the dinner bell sounded. Choosing my opportunity, I strolled across the quadrangle and secreted myself in one of the offices. Through a chink I watched the sentries. For half an hour they remained stolid and obstructive. Then, all of a sudden, one turned and walked up to his comrade, and they began to talk. Their backs were turned. Now or never. I darted out of my hiding place and ran to the wall, seized the top with my hands, and drew myself up. Twice I let myself down again in sickly hesitation, and then, with a third resolve, scrambled up. The top was flat. Lying on it, I had one parting glimpse of the sentries, still talking, still with their backs turned; but I repeat, fifteen yards away. Then I lowered myself silently down into the adjoining garden and crouched among the shrubs. I was free. The first step had been taken, and it was irrevocable. "It now remained to await the arrival of my comrade. The bushes of the garden gave a good deal of cover, and in the moonlight their shadows lay black on the ground. Twenty yards away was the house, and I had not been five minutes in hiding before I perceived that it was full of people; the windows revealed brightly-lighted rooms, and within I could see figures moving about. "This was a fresh complication. We had always thought the house unoccupied. Presently a man came out of the door and walked across the garden in my direction. Scarcely ten yards away he stopped and stood still, looking steadily toward me. I remained absolutely motionless. For a long time the man and I remained opposite each other, and every instant I expected him to spring forward. "After a spell another man came out of the house, lighted a cigar, and both he and the other walked off together. No sooner had they turned than a cat pursued by a dog rushed into the bushes and collided with me. The startled animal uttered a miaou of alarm and darted back again, making a horrible rustling. Both men stopped at once. But it was only a cat, and they passed into the town. "I looked at my watch. An hour had passed since I climbed the wall. Where was my comrade? Suddenly I heard a voice from within the quadrangle say, quite loud, "All my! I crawled back to the wall. The officers were walking up and down the other side jabbering Latin words, laughing, and talking all manner of nonsense amid which I caught my name. "I risked a cough. One of the officers immediately began to chatter alone. The other said, slowly and clearly, " * * * cannot get out. The sentry suspects. It's all up. Can you get back again? But now all my fears fell from me at once. To go back was impossible. I could not hope to climb the wall unnoticed. I said to the officers: "I shall go on alone." "The gate which led into the road was only a few yards from another sentry. I strode into the middle of the garden, walked past the windows of the house without any attempt at concealment, and so went through the gate and turned to the left. "I passed the sentry at less than five yards. Most of them knew me by sight. Whether he looked at me or not I do not know, for I never turned my head. But after walking a hundred yards I knew that the second obstacle had been surmounted. I was at large in Pretoria. "I walked on leisurely through the night, humming a tune and choosing the middle of the road. All the streets were full of burghers, but they paid no attention to me. Gradually I reached the suburbs and on a little bridge I sat down to reflect and consider. "I was in the heart of the enemy's country. I had £75 in my pocket and four slabs of chocolate. I formed a plan. I would find the Delagoa Bay railway. Without map or compass I must follow that in spite of the pickets. After walking south for half a mile I struck the railroad." "How Mr. Churchill boarded a passing train and eventually arrived at Delagoa Bay has already been reported.
