Whatever the result of the argument the conductor is in the right. To begin with, Canadian money isn't legal tender and would not be if it were worth more than American monies. It is a fact that the street car companies will not accept Canadian money from its conductors. The reason for this is that the banks will not accept it from the street car companies. It must be disposed of to coin brokers, who will not buy it at par. If a conductor on a street car or a ticket seller of the elevated road accepts a Canadian coln he does so at his own risk. If he can dispose of it in making change to other passengers, well and good. If not ne is the person who is stuck. It's his
