WHEN THE WILD TURKEY IS A FOOL.

The Green County Sportsmen's Association, near Springfield, Mo., has a game preserve of some 12,000 acres. Its members recently advertised for some wild turkeys with which to stock the woodland. No one is raising the birds as pheasants are raised, and for a time it looked as though it would be impossible to secure turkeys at any price.

The club finally received help from a very unexpected source. "Pet" Darcy, an old farmer, who was born in Missouri, some seventy years ago, heard that the club wanted turkeys, and going to the manager, said he would like to try his hand at catching them. "I used to catch them when I was a boy," said he. "They were as thick as squirrels then. Lots of times I've staid guard with a rifle to keep 'em off my father's cornfield. They were so thick here fifty years ago that I've often had to stop tracking a deer because a flock of turkeys would cross the track ahead of me and blot out the deer tracks. We used to take them in those days in rail pens, and what we did then we can do now, if we can find the birds."

The manager of the preserve took Darcy with a couple of helpers to the Ozarks, where the birds are still to be found. It was a week before they reached a place where the birds seemed to be sufficiently numerous to promise success for the trapping enterprise. Then Darcy and his men set to work to make a pen twenty feet long, twelve feet wide, and ten feet high. Wire netting was substituted for falls, and about the whole affair branches and young trees were stuck in the ground in such a way as to hide the netting. Under one side of the pen a narrow trench was dug just deep enough to allow a stooping turkey to walk in without striking its head against the netting above. This trench began with a gradual downward slope, and led into the pen. When completed the trap was left for a week.

Then Darcy took a bag of shelled corn and went at night, when no turkey would see him, to the trap. He threw several handfuls of corn into the pen, and sprinkled a line of grains from that point several hundred feet through the woods. After that he would slip out every afternoon to watch the crowd of turkeys. It was about a week later when he saw from the top of a rock where he was lying that the turkeys had found the corn. He counted eighteen in the flock, all eating the grains as fast as they could gather them up.

They hurried along, now one ahead and now another, cutting in front of the leader. So they approached the trap. The foremost bird entered the trench without looking up and followed the trail into the pen. The others followed until there were fourteen turkeys in the trap. Then they discovered that something was wrong and began to flutter in a way that warned the birds on the outside to keep out.

At this Darcy took a shot at one of those remaining outside, and killed the only turkey that had fallen to his lot since he went into the Confederate army in 1861.

The strange thing about the working of the trap was that, nothing under the sun hindered the birds from leaving it. The trench by which they entered was still open. The difficulty lay in the fact that they had all entered with their heads down, looking for the corn, and when they found they were trapped began to look up. Their heads were above the entrance and they wasted their strength in useless efforts to fly through the wire screen at the top.

Any one who wants to hunt turkeys today will find the birds confined to a very limited range. They will find none to the northwest of an east and west line running through New York city. The first an Eastern man sees will be in the mountains of Pennsylvania and West Virginia. From there he will find a few of the birds all along the line of the Appalachian mountains, through Virginia, the Carolinas, Tennessee, and Kentucky. South of that he will find them in somewhat larger numbers in the great pine forests of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. West of the Mississippi there are turkeys in Arkansas and some portions of the southwest.

NOTED EVANGELIST

H. C. PATTERSON BEGINS HIS WORK AT CHRISTIAN CHURCH

That Sanctuary Crowded on Sunday Night, and Last Evening—Wonderful Singing of Miss Nona McCormick, Who Renders Two Solos Each Evening.

Evangelist H. C. Patterson, of Indianapolis, Indiana, who began a series of services at the First Christian church, was greeted by an enormous audience at the first service, on Sunday night, standing room being at a premium, and a most interesting sermon was delivered by the evangelist, while the singing of Miss Nona McCormick entranced the audience.

Last night Evangelist Patterson again preached to a fine audience on the following subject: "The Poverty of One, for the Riches of Many." His text was "For Ye Know the Grace of Our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was Rich yet for Your Sakes He Became Poor that We through His Poverty Might Be Rich." The sermon should have been heard through to be fully appreciated. The sermon throughout abounded in beautiful thoughts and expressions. He treated his subject in the following manner:

I.—The riches of Jesus consisted in: 1.—The riches of His nature, which were all things made that were made, and without Him was not anything made that was made. Man does not necessarily need to own broad acres of land or large bank stock to be rich. There are those whose intellectual gifts and endowment with inventive genius has brought the world at their feet offering tribute. These were rich in such gifts since money and honor always accompany such.

Second—He was rich in the inheritance of a name. Being made so much better than the angels, as he has by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee? Third—He was rich in glory. That word glory has staggered the most fruitful imagination of man. During the ages men have tried to imagine his glory had with the Father before the worlds were, and some have caused such imagination to take shape on canvases. A few years ago the speaker stood in the Doge's Palace in Venice, Italy, and looked upon that wonderful painting, "The Glories of Paradise," covering 2200 feet of canvases. While admiring the artist's wonderful work of art from a mechanical point of view, he thought he had made a miserable failure in an effort to represent the glory in which Christ was rich, since Paul says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the mind of man to conceive of the things which God hath prepared for those who love Him."

II.—"His Poverty" consisted in: First, His taking upon himself human nature and becoming subject to the temptations of life, and that with a possibility of a fall. Second—In his effort to impress the outcast with his love for them he lost his reputation and was classed among the "winners" and a friend of publicans and sinners. Third—He was made worse than the murderers in the minds of the people, for they made choice of Barabbas—a murderer—to be released unto them, and demanded the crucifixion of Jesus. Fourth—He was made worse than thieves for, when they started to crucify with whom he was associated, and between them was hung upon the cross. Tradition has it that his cross was higher than either of the others and in this way they impressed the mob that he was the chief of robbers and murderers. They crowned him with thorns, they put a mock robe upon him, they placed a scepter in his hand, and the last act in their efforts to humiliate him was lifting him upon the cross. There he suffered and died; "enduring the cross, despising the shame, that the world might through his death inherit the greatest blessing ever bestowed upon mankind—the forgiveness of sin, the gift of the Holy Spirit and Eternal Life. Fifth—He went into the grave, as our mortality demanded such descent. Then had none gone there with power to rob death of its sting and the grave of its victory. He did it, and bringing life and immortality to light offered it to the world.

III.—"That We Might Be Rich." First—Christianity is admitted by all civilized people to be the greatest inheritance ever bestowed upon mankind, and it was Christ Jesus who was its author and giver. We know of nothing for which we would exchange this wonderful gift. Second—To tear the Bible from the literature of this land would leave only a skeleton, whose distorted features would horrify the intelligence of the world and leave it barren of the grandest thoughts—the purest diction—the sublimest poetry, and the most refining principles ever known. To the Lord Jesus Christ we are indebted for this great boon to humanity. Third—We are enriched in the hope of a blissful immortality which comes through his resurrection. For four thousand years he has been seated upon the throne, and he will live, only to have their willing cry reverberate along the corridors of time and return only to mock them. When this Jesus went out and returned it was to confirm them in the belief of the resurrection, and to them he gave the assurance that "because I live ye shall live also." I am the resurrection and the life. He who believeth in me shall never die. And he who believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live. To the broken-hearted father and mother whose joy and pride of the home has just been taken away, he says: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Yes, we are rich since we are children of a King whose reign shall never cease and to whose kingdom there shall be no end. To be the child of such a king and heir to the eternal inheritance than to own the world, Sinner, will you accept this King and be subject to his reign over you? If so, come and accept him now.

Tonight Mr. Patterson will preach on "The Sacrifices We Must Make, or The Conditions of Discipleship." This discourse contains much of Mr. Patterson's experiences in Rome, Paris and Jerusalem. Miss McCormick is one of the most wonderful singers ever heard here and will render two solos each night, one at opening and one at the close. Come and hear her.
