

POLITICAL POT BOILING HIGH

Results of the Portland Primaries of Last Saturday

WILL HAVE VERY LITTLE EFFECT ON GOVERNOR GEER'S CANDIDACY FOR RENOMINATION.

The Aspirants for Places on the County Are Numerous and Are Hard at Work—Who Some of Them Are.

The political pot is boiling high in Marion county, and candidates for office are working hard to secure the promises of a sufficient number of delegates in the county convention, and the delegates elected last Friday are being constantly besieged by men desirous of support. Since the primaries settled the state contest, so far as Marion county is concerned, the candidates for county offices are having their innng, and they are waiting no time in the effort to snatch success for themselves.

The Marion county convention will, as shown on Saturday morning, be controlled by the Ger forces, and will doubtless send a solid delegation to the State Convention for the administration. The opposition to Governor Geer claims to control a half dozen or more precinct delegations, but this will probably benefit them very little, as the majority for the administration is so overwhelming, that it is not at all likely that the minority will be allowed to divide the county's vote in the State Convention.

The result of the contest for control of the Multnomah county primaries, on Saturday last, makes little difference in this county, and whatever the feeling of the majority in Portland may be regarding the nomination for Governor, there is little fear that it will affect the chances of Governor Geer or any of the rest of the administration.

Aside from the fact that Governor Geer will have a solid delegation from Marion county, he will have equally strong support from a number of other valley counties and several from Eastern Oregon, and this, with his popularity among the common people, which today is even greater than it was four years ago, will be a strong factor in his favor and will bring him support that will almost make his nomination unanimous.

- County Officers.
- The most important county office which is to be filled at the coming election, and for which the convention will have to put forward a strong candidate, is that of sheriff. For four years this office has been held by the Democrats, "our friends, the enemy"—and the Republicans of Marion county are now determined to again secure this office for one of their own men. Among the candidates for this position are four men well known throughout the county. Wm. A. Taylor, of Macleay, is one of these, and he is making an active campaign. So is Hon. Charles D. Hartman, of Scotts Mills, and a member of the last Legislature from Marion county. Wm. H. Savage, of Englewood, for a number of years the superintendent of the pavilion at the State Fair, is also at this time, as is Robert A. Witzel, a well-known farmer from Turner precinct.

For the office of county clerk there are but two candidates. John W. Roland, formerly a merchant of Jefferson, and who served as bookkeeper at the Insane Asylum, is an active candidate, and he is developing strong support from various parts of the county. Mr. Roland is an office man of exceptional ability, and would make an excellent county clerk. A. F. Blackerby, of Silvertown, is another candidate for the place, and is making an active canvass. He once served this county as assessor. He also is developing considerable strength, and will doubtless make a good showing when the convention meets.

For the office of county recorder three candidates are in the field. S. A. McFadden, of this city, for a time deputy under the present incumbent, is a candidate and he is securing considerable encouragement in the race. Fred A. Legg, the Salem druggist, is another man seriously figuring on the nomination for this office, while J. C. Stegmann, the Gervais merchant, and for years a leader of the Republicans in the south end of the county, is also in the race.

For county treasurer there are four avowed candidates. J. Henry Haas, the Salem jeweler, and a resident of this city for a third of a century, is one of the aspirants. Robert A. Crossan, the top dealer, is after the place, as is Fred A. Haas, a state street druggist. E. B. Waiters, a young resident of Stayton, is also in the fight and working diligently for support.

Only one candidate for county assessor has thus far appeared, in the person of Charles Lembecke, the present incumbent, and it is generally believed that no opposition will appear and that Mr. Lembecke will be nominated by acclamation. The same condition of affairs exists in the case of County Surveyor B. B. Herrick Jr., who has served in that capacity for five terms. Dr. D. P. Lane, the present coroner, is also up for renomination, and thus far without opposition.

Following is a list of candidates for the different positions, state and county:

FIVE CASES ARE REVERSED

Supreme Court Yesterday Handled Down Decisions

THE STAYTON STREET LITIGATION ENDED IN THAT THE TOWN LOSES ITS CASE.

Portland is Enjoined from Collecting Street Assessments Because of the Posting of Defective Notices—Two Polk County Appeal Cases.

The Supreme Court yesterday handled down five decisions in appeal cases heretofore argued. They are:

G. D. Trotter, appellant, vs. Town of Stayton, respondent; appeal from Marion county. Hon. R. P. Boise, judge; reversed; opinion by Chief Justice R. S. Bean.

This was a suit to quiet title to a small strip of land on the east and north sides of plaintiff's property in the town of Stayton, as laid off and platted in 1871. The point of controversy is the west line of Third street and the south line of Ida street. As originally laid off the initial corner, from which the survey started, was 2.97 chains north of the quarter section corner between sections 16 and 15, t 9 s, r 1 w. From this point the lots and blocks were surveyed. In 1900 the town council employed Alfred Gobelet, an independent surveyor, to re-establish the lines, and he did so independent of the original survey, and only straightened out the streets. This survey cut off the strip of land off the property of plaintiff, here in controversy. Later the County Surveyor was secured by some of the citizens to survey the streets, and he started from the original base, and his lines in all respects conformed with the original lines of the dedication. Plaintiff then brought this suit, and the Circuit Court found for the town, and against the plaintiff, holding the Gobelet survey to be the right one, and plaintiff appealed. The appellate court decides in favor of the original survey, and that of the county surveyor, reverses the decision of the lower court, and enters a decree in favor of plaintiff.

B. I. Ferguson, appellant, vs. Mrs. Ollie M. Byers, respondent; appeal from Polk county. Hon. R. P. Boise, judge; reversed and remanded. Opinion by Associate Justice F. A. Moore.

This suit was on petition for review of judgment of an inferior court. Defendant had sued plaintiff in a justice court for the recovery of specific personal property, valued at $249, with damages of $25 for its wrongful detention, making in all $274. Plaintiff claimed the court had no jurisdiction, but the Circuit Court held otherwise. The Supreme Court sustains plaintiff's contention, and reverses the judgment.

J. A. Byers, appellant, vs. B. I. Ferguson, respondent; appeal from Polk county. Hon. George H. Burnett, judge; reversed. Opinion by Associate Justice F. A. Moore.

This action was begun in a justice court to recover possession of personal property. Plaintiff claims ownership and right of possession of a certain horse held by defendant, because the same is exempt from execution. A defective statement in the pleadings was demurred to in the justice court, and the demurrer was overruled. The defendant then answered over, and proceeded to trial. When the case came up in the Circuit Court, a similar demurrer was entered and sustained. This, the Supreme Court holds, was an error, the defect having been cured by the answer in the justice court.

The Bank of British Columbia, et al., appellants, vs. City of Portland, et al., respondents; appeal from Multnomah county. Hon. John B. Cleland, judge; reversed. Opinion by Associate Justice C. E. Wolverton.

This was a suit to enjoin the collection of assessments for a street improvement, based upon the non-observance of the charter provisions in doing the work. Several points were raised and ground given why the notice and action of the council were illegal, but the court finds that all were within the powers of the council except the posting of the notice at each end of the proposed line of improvement. The charter requires that within three days after the passage of the resolution providing for the improvement, a notice shall be posted at each end of the line of improvement, the heading of which notice shall be in letters one inch long. This notice was posted, but the heading was in smaller type than required by the charter, hence not a proper notice, and the judgment of the trial court was, therefore, reversed, and a decree entered restraining the collection of the assessment.

The Larch Mountain Investment Company, plaintiff and appellant, vs. T. C. Garbade, John H. Woodward, C. C. Palmer and the Bridal Veil Lumbering Company, defendants and respondents, and Wm. Frazier, sheriff of Multnomah county, defendant and appellant; appeal from Multnomah county. Hon. John B. Cleland, judge; reversed. Opinion by Chief Justice R. S. Bean.

This was a suit to determine the ownership of $2271.21, deposited with the sheriff of Multnomah county to redeem from defendant Garbade certain lands sold under an execution on a judgment against it. The lands in the case originally belonged to the plaintiff, but were sold under execution to the defendant Garbade. After the sale under execution, the plaintiff deposited the money for the redemption of the land, but this was refused by Garbade. Later Garbade sold his title to the lands to the lumbering company, and immediately thereafter his attorneys appeared in the sheriff's office and claimed the money deposited for redemption. This money was refused them, and as they under an

GROWING AND FATTENING STOCK

To indicate the best conditions for growing and fattening stock it is first necessary to make a distinction between breeding stock and that intended for the fat stock market.

In preparing any class of stock for the slaughter market it is sound policy to make the time of growth as short as possible. The chief reason for this is the fact that the animal must necessarily consume considerable food for support without making any increase, and the longer the period of growth the greater the cost of the food maintenance. Another advantage associated with shortening the period of growth is the fact that medium sized animals find, as a rule, the quickest and best sales in the markets. The lamb that is fat at ninety pounds live weight, the hog that is marketable at two hundred and fifty pounds, and the smooth steer that goes to the shambles weighing fourteen hundred, are the most desirable as a rule for the purpose of slaughter. Of course there are times when the 1200-pound weeder and the 1600-pound steer will sell readily and well for export, and when the heavy hog of 400 pounds also brings as good a price as any other; but these are not so frequently desirable as the lighter and better finished types. In beginning the preparation of stock for the fat market it is the more profitable aim to keep them gaining in flesh, as well as in growth, from the time of birth until they are shipped to market. This means careful and continuous feeding. In the instance of pigs it means the liberal use of skim milk, where this is obtainable, with careful feeding of corn, short, gluten feed, or wheat. To carry a load of Fat pigs along successfully during the winter months and keep them from doing too well or not well enough, is a nice point in the feeder's art. Following a bunch of corn fed steers is likely to keep them active enough and give them all the corn they need; and if this is supplemented with a milk stop the progress is likely to be satisfactory. Among calves at this season the feeding is apt to be light. To make steers of the best quality, however, they should undoubtedly have grain the first winter. Corn alone is too one-sided in its constituents, and consequently if fed alone some of the nutritive qualities are likely to be wasted. Mixed with bran or oats, however, the demands of the calf in growing and fattening are met very satisfactorily. It seems safe to assume that finished beef made by the calves of this season is going to sell for an unusually high price, so that the chances are they will pay for the extra care that is given them now.

In the rearing of breeding stock the growing period should be lengthened rather than shortened by the encroachment of fattening. While early maturity in fattening stock is encouraged by securing this quality in our breeding stock, yet there is a limit in the instance of the latter which cannot be completely ignored by the breeder. It would seem that we had about reached that limit. Normally cattle have completed their teething when four or five years old, and that is generally accepted as indicative of complete maturity. Yet our breeding cattle are filling their different purposes before they have passed half way towards this time. Early breeding undoubtedly has assisted early maturity, especially where it has been preceded by early and liberal feeding. Swine have a perfect set of teeth in from two to two and a half years, sheep when about four years, and horses when close to five years. Early breeding of swine has been favorable to maturity, and the same is true in a degree to sheep. In those breeds where large and rapidly maturing lambs have been desired, the ewes have in many flocks been bred as lambs, and where they were large enough, this practice appears to have been favorable to securing heavy weights in lambs. In animals intended for meat early breeding and liberal feeding have been advantageous, but when the production of an animal intended to endure, such as the horse, then a different policy is necessary. A horse has a full mouth when about five years old, and it seems that it takes that length of time to bring out the best that is in him, either for speed or draft. Of course it depends somewhat on strains, some maturing earlier than others, but it will generally be observed that exceptional maturity means a shortened period of usefulness. A colt should be fed so as to encourage growth and the building of frame and muscle, rather than for the production of fat. Little corn and more oats and bran, with liberal exercise, are conducive to these ends. In feeding colts it is the worst possible policy to keep them fat and sleek rather than growy and strong in bone and muscle.—Iowa Homestead.

SPRING HINTS.

Instead of taking a tonic this Spring to give you an appetite and brace you up, I do wish you would try the plan that Jack and I have found so much more satisfactory. As soon as at the middle of February, we begin to lessen the quantity of meat on our bill of fare, and to go without an occasional meal. We find that it is easier to go without breakfast than any other meal, but at first we allow ourselves a glass of hot milk, soon after rising, or a cup of coffee, if we think we can't live without it. After a few days we can get along without difficulty, and we always feel better for doing so.

We bribe the children to fast, believing it is better to spend money this way than in medicine. It gives their stomachs an opportunity to rest, and to get ready for the change that warm weather always brings to the system. We never catch them to eat when they don't feel like it, for we believe that food taken without an appetite only serves to clog the system. We encourage them in drinking a great deal of water at this season of the year, and try to get them to take hot water regularly before meal time. If this doesn't relax the bowels sufficiently we give a little sulphur in the good, old-fashioned way, for we believe the body should have a thorough cleaning out every Spring if one would keep well during the Summer.—[Mrs. Robinson, in Am. Bulletin.]

Mrs. C. S. Moore went to Portland yesterday afternoon for a visit to relatives.

THE RUSH IN SHERIFF DURBIN'S OFFICE IS OVER

Since the Time for the Rebate Has Expired, There Are Fewer Taxpayers at the Court House—Heavy Collections Made.

As the rebate provision of the new tax law has expired the rush and excitement has subsided in the sheriff's department at the court house, and all was serenely quiet in the neighborhood of that office yesterday and the day before. B. B. Colbath and J. R. Linn, who are still very busy engaged in receiving the mail applications—and for an occasional straggler to enquire about his or his neighbor's taxes. The deputies, who have been laboring almost incessantly night and day for more than fifteen days, worked all day Sunday in looking up and receipting for the Southern Pacific Company's taxes, which alone amounts to $8961.95 and yesterday started in upon the immense pile of over 1000 letters which represent about $15,000 in taxes.

Up to Saturday evening last a little over $110,000 had been collected of the 1901 taxes, just half of the entire amount which is $220,000, and as the tax books become delinquent until the first Monday in April (7th) Deputy Sheriff Colbath thinks that over half of the remainder will have been collected before the expiration of that time.

During the March term of the county commissioners' court, which was also during the beginning of the rush of the taxpayers into the sheriff's office, the court made an official visit to this department and very considerably, though informally, authorized Deputy Colbath to employ all of the help necessary and all of the help that could be utilized to assist in the work was engaged.

One day while looking over the Gazette, I noticed that Pain Balm was positively guaranteed to cure rheumatism, so I bought a bottle of it and before using two-thirds of it my rheumatism had taken its flight and I have not had a rheumatic pain since."
