SUBSCRIPTION RATES:
One year, in advance, $1.00
Six months, in advance, .50
Three months, in advance, .25
One year, on time, 1.25

The Statesman has been established for nearly fifty years, and it has some subscribers who have received it nearly that long, and many who have read it for a generation. Some of these object to having the paper discontinued at the time of expiration of their subscription. For the benefit of these, and for other reasons, we have concluded to discontinue subscriptions only when a notice to do so. All persons paying for subscriptions, or paying in advance, will have the benefit of the dollar rate. But if they do not pay for six months, the rate will be $1.25 a year. However, we will send the paper to all responsible persons who order it, though they may not read it, and we will keep the subscription account run over six months. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, we will keep this notice standing at this place in the paper.

CIRCULATION (SWORN) OVER 4000

AS TO CUBA.

While the Cuban question, as an immediate, practical issue, is shelved pending the reassembling of Congress, it is still much to the front in newspaper discussion. Many leading journals of all ways of political thinking are demanding such a settlement of the matter as will fulfill our duty toward Cuba, by encouraging her industry and commerce. The gist of their demands, in a general way, is that we should give Cuba some peculiar commercial advantages, even though at the expense of certain of our own industries.

There can be no sane discussion of this question without first looking facts in the face regardless of sentiment. The main fact is that we owe Cuba nothing. We have done all that we agreed to do for her when we entered upon a war with Spain to secure Cuban independence. We have done a great deal more than the average public opinion of the world expected. Probably there was not a statesman or publicist in Europe who expected us to surrender Cuba to her own people on the termination of the war. They judged others by themselves. No European nation would have abandoned such an acquisition. Many of our own people were of the same way of thinking.

But we carried out all of our agreements to the letter and in their spirit. Now we have properly no more to do with Cuba than any other country. We are under no obligation to give her special privileges in our markets. She has attained her majority and become an independent member of the family of nations.

If we are to make any special arrangement with her, of a commercial nature the business idea for us in the connection is to confound our own welfare. Cuba's also, so far as the two are dependent upon each other. But the idea should always be kept steadily in view that it is a business, not a philanthropic arrangement.

But another question arises. How much would any favorable terms we might grant Cuba be wrested to the advantage of certain American interests which are popularly supposed to be quite able to take care of themselves? How much would the sugar trust and the tobacco trust profit by the arrangement?

Next how much would certain American interests which are not bolstered by trusts suffer by the arrangement? Some of these interests are very near to us of Oregon and California.

If we are to "even up" in this matter between Cuban and American interests we should give our own interests the first place, and among them we should first consult those which are least able to take care of themselves in the event of any special commercial arrangement. When that has been done, it may appear that there is no good ground for such arrangement.

And then the idea of reciprocity is not as popular as it once was. Some of the people of the East were very anxious for a reciprocal treaty with France, and one was negotiated, under the instruction of President McKinley. But it was found that it contained concessions to the prune growers of France. So on through a long list of articles produced in this country. There were seven or eight other reciprocal treaties negotiated and agreed to by the agents of the United States and the several governments. But the Senate to Reform School boys. They do not deserve it. There are scores of boys in Oregon who have been in the State Reform School and who are now leading upright and useful lives; many of them who were thought to be very bad boys when they were sent there occupying responsible positions where they are trusted, and do not violate the trusts.

It is not to be presumed that because this boy has gone to the Reform School he will in time go to the Penitentiary. In well regulated and properly disciplined reform schools, 80 to 85 per cent of the boys come out good and law abiding citizens. Very few go to the Penitentiaries. Out of the several hundred boys who have been in the Oregon State Reform School, only five or six have been in the Penitentiary. All of these would have gone, sooner or later, anyway. These were nearly grown up when taken in charge; their training had been bad, and some of them were born bad.

THE LOVE OF HUMAN MOTHERS.

Among the lower animals the mother love for her offspring lasts only until the offspring are able to shift for themselves. The hen will fret and fight for her downy chicks but when they become feathered and commence to do their own foraging the mother hen becomes indifferent to them and thinks only of hatching another brood. The mare loves her foal and the cow her calf only during the suckling period. Canine dams cease to show affection for their progeny after the puppy age. So through the entire animal kingdom below the human species, the maternal instinct endures only while the young ones are helpless and ceases when they are grown up.

How different is the love of a human mother for her children. That love never dies and seems to grow more intense according as the children become less and less worthy of it. The black sheep is often the best beloved.

Take the case of the mother of Captain Putnam Bradlee Strong, who disgraced himself and brought shame on his honored family by his escapade with May Yohe, formerly an actress, who ran away with him when she was the wife of Lord Francis Hope. As though he had not done enough to disgust the world, Captain Strong tired of the woman and left her, first having secretly pawned her jewels, which were worth a large amount of money. May Yohe accused her deserting paramour of larceny, and a warrant was issued for the arrest of Captain Strong.

One would think that Strong by this time had forfeited all claims on his family. He had gone his way, selfishly and cruelly, had sinned notoriously and had indulged himself without caring in the least for the pain and humiliation which his conduct caused at home.

But when this ingrate, this libertine, this disgraced man was hiding from arrest on a charge of theft, his mother came forward to save him. She spent her small private fortune in redeeming the stolen jewels from pawn, and by restoring them to Miss Yohe appeased that woman's vengeful ire. The warrant was withdrawn and Captain Strong is now safe.

Mrs. Strong was foolish, of course, but her folly bordered on the sublime. Her son did not deserve her love, but he was her son and she gave all she had to save him from prison. Nine mothers out of ten would have done likewise.

There is no reasoning about a mother's love. It is the one love which nothing can destroy; which survives under extreme cruelty and ingratitude. A contemporary writer asserts the opinion that most mothers are really insane on the subject of their children. They see in them beauties of mind and body which nobody else ever saw. They lavish love on dissipated, stupid sons, who never had a fine emotion or a fine thought.

Children never know until they themselves become parents how much their mothers loved them and did for them. Mother love is absolutely pure and unselfish. No matter what success a man attains, he will never be loved as blindly as his mother loved him, and no matter what depths he may fall his mother will love him still.

NOT ABOUT TRACY.

We are surprised that the showy exploits of the escaped convict, Tracy, should have caused a solid Western journal like the Denver Post to sink so easily and deep into false philosophy.

"Desperado Tracy, who escaped from the Oregon penitentiary June 2, seems to be another notable example of energy misapplied. The bandit has performed feats of daring that seem almost superhuman. He has shown the deepest cunning in eluding his pursuers when at close quarters, and when too hard pressed he has shot with unfailing accuracy, as his long list of victims will show. He has known when to be bold and when to be cunning. He has planned with the skill of a general, and has fought with the desperation of a man on the firing line. As a result he has practically held two states at bay and has many times escaped with ease when his capture seemed certain.

"There is no telling what might have been the career of such a man had he chosen to devote his energies to fields other than criminal. With such resources as he has called to his command in the last three weeks there is no doubt that Harry Tracy could have dazzled the world in almost anything calling for qualities of courage and craftiness. As a soldier, an explorer, a speculator, a captain of any enterprise calling for daring, properly tempered with coolness, the man could not have failed. Yet he evidently threw away all his chances and chose to turn criminal and to pit himself against the inexorable laws that govern human kind and hold society together."

All of which is stuff. There is no reason to think that Tracy's qualities, effectively as they have served him during the last few exciting weeks, are not of the lowest order. In a contest with his pursuers, he has had the immeasurable advantage of being absolutely without restraint of any kind. He has treated all other people with the authority of a man who would kill if they did not obey. The treacherous murder of his companion, Merrill, shows how perfectly ready he was to kill. Probably ninety-nine outlaws out of a hundred possessed of Tracy's knowledge of the country and its people, as merciless as his fellows and as experienced in crime, could have traveled his bloody road with equal success and not one of them, not even Tracy, would ever disclose any superior ability if engaged in honest callings.—New York Sun.

The Sun is right. Tracy is merely a criminal, a little more daring, slightly more reckless, certainly more nearly devoid of the promptings of human nature, than the ordinary pervert, of his class. He has no qualities that would have made him a leader to respect or a successful operator in any line of honest endeavor had his trainings been different. He is not worthy of consideration at all otherwise than as a dangerous and heartless criminal. He is not even worthy of the notoriety which has been given, and which he craves more than all else, with a craving that amounts to a kind of insanity.

IN WISCONSIN.

The condition of Republican politics in Wisconsin has attracted wide attention. The New York Sun describes the situation as follows:

"The Hon. Robert M. La Follette is in control of the Republican party in Wisconsin, of which state the Hon. John Coit Spooner, likewise a Republican, is a representative in the Federal Senate. La Follette is a species of Pinckney, with larger relations to politics and higher intellectual qualities. He holds certain new and aggressive views regarding the taxation of corporate property and on nomination at primaries instead of by conventions of delegates. The time to choose a Senator for the seat now held by Senator Spooner is approaching, and, bending to general Republican hope that Senator Spooner may be re-elected, the Wisconsin Republican State Convention has endorsed that statesman, on condition that the latter will declare for the La Follette platform.

"The continued service to the Republican party of a veritable leader in the National Senate, one of the most valuable advocates and guides the party has for dealing with the grave questions before the country is to depend on his attitude toward certain novelities in state politics proposed by this Wisconsin governor.

"The merits of the La Follette scheme we will not discuss. Suffice it to say that they have no vital relation to the desires of Senator Spooner for reelection or to the partisan wisdom of keeping him in his present office. There he should stay, whether he subscribes to the La Follette platform or not, and the responsibility for keeping him there seems to have fallen on the platform's author."

The way to build up Salem is to patronize Salem people. This refers to all lines of business. There should be no exceptions—not even in the case of the Minneapolis newspaper wanting $400 for advertising. No doubt it is a good thing; but Minneapolis is a long way from Salem. Besides, just now, the advertising scheme of the Harriman railroad people is the thing. It should be adhered to for the present. And we believe it will bring such splendid results that we will want to take it up again next year, and furnish even a greater amount of printed matter than we have agreed to furnish to the Harriman people this year.

The New York leaf tobacco board of trade has adopted resolutions in favor of placing "all corporations whose securities are offered to the public" under government supervision, "similar to that now existing in the case of national banks." Perhaps in the end we may have to come to that. But graduated income and corporation taxes would be better and more effective. What this country needs is more common sense and less legislation.

If Tracy wants to be a real hero, and pose in the calcium lights of fame without danger to himself let him throw away his gun and become a prizefighter.
