THE COLLAPSED STRIKE.

The dispatches of yesterday stated that there was a prospect of the great strike coming to an end. If the strikers go back upon the terms published in the dispatches, it will be as near an unconditional surrender as possible.

In a word, the strikers have gained absolutely nothing, and all the loss and suffering which has followed their ill-advised and foolish movement has nothing to offset it.

This could not have happened if the strikers had had just cause for their action. It is easy to say that the outcome is a triumph of might over right, that they have simply yielded to overpowering forces.

The 2,000 men who quit work at the beginning made no complaint that they were overworked or under paid, and their only grievance was that the Reading railroad was delivering coal to other corporations that employed non-union help.

It is needless to say that such a strike, for such a purpose, was ordered by agitators, instead of genuine workmen, and that it has never had the hearty support of most of those for whose benefit it was ostensibly begun and carried on.

Many of the railroad men absolutely refused to obey the orders of master workmen and walking delegates, and it has been apparent that a very large majority of the miners were entirely willing to return as soon as it was safe for them to do so.

CIGARETTE PICTURES.

About two months ago the San Francisco Chronicle uttered a hot protest against cigarette pictures. At first the cigarette manufacturers put into the packages portraits of popular actresses, but these were not what the cigarette purchasers desired, for they were modest portraits.

The evil of such vile and lewd pictures circulating with perfect freedom among boys—and sometimes, it may be feared, among girls—cannot be overestimated or overstated. Children are only too quick to receive impressions, especially if they are in the direction of matters forbidden them, and the barriers of purity and modesty which tender parental care and painstaking education have reared about them are first undermined and then swept away altogether by the flood of vice which finds its source and fountainhead in just such things as these pictures.

AN ADMIRABLE SUGGESTION.

ED. CAPITAL JOURNAL.—I have more than once been "taken in and done for" by ex-convicts, whom I have tried to help make a professedly new start on the road to honesty and virtue. But it is hard to preach to them about christian philanthropy and then refuse substantial help when it looks like risking a few dollars.

Why wouldn't it be a good plan to have weather flags with "cold wave," "warmer," "rain," "snow," etc., on them in plain English? This trying to keep the present patterns in one's head, and remembering what they mean, is worse than working out Donnelly's cipher or learning Volapuk.

THERE is a wonderful tendency among amateur correspondents of a newspaper to give opinions in place of news. They imagine that nothing which really takes place is so important as what they think about something. Correspondents of the CAPITAL JOURNAL will please put in a period when they tell the news.
