DEATH OF CONKLING.

Our dispatches to-day communicate the mournful intelligence that New York's great and favorite statesman, Roscoe Conkling, is no more. For several days the bulletins issued by his physicians have been watched with great interest, the apprehension being general that he was afflicted with a disease that would terminate fatally.

He has gone to his grave, and it may be said with truth, "a great man has fallen in Israel." He belonged to a period in our politics when patronage was an attribute to power, and for years it was said of him that he carried his state in his pocket. By family understanding between President Grant and the senate, favors were dealt out to kinsfolk and dependants without any special regard to the interest of the country. But while misrule triumphed in our midst, under the sanction of high names, until the strength of the republicans was undermined and they were finally hurled from power, still Conkling ever kept his hands clean. His was a royal soul—imperious, implacable, commanding—scorning venality and above the corrupting influence of money. His abandonment of the senate with "Mr. Toole Platt" in his following, has been charged against him as treachery to his party; but he has atoned for his offense by absconding himself from public life, burying in privacy at home whatever faults he may have committed.

At fifty-five years of age, in the full vigor of his intellectual faculties, this distinguished statesman has been stricken down, the name of American has been illustrated by his career, and those who oppose as well as those who approve his political course, will do reverence to his name as that of a natural leader and honest man.

By John's gave the Statesman editor a raking over on Monday evening which was paralyzing to weak nerves. The audience enjoyed and approved this investigation because they felt it was richly merited. But a prudent man would have profited by the abuse and resolved to mend his ways. Yet the experience was thrown away on our young friend. This morning he returns gallantly to the charge, berating the distinguished Kansan as "a hypocrite" and "an old scoundrel", whose "name is a reproach at home and a stench abroad." Go it, husband! Go it, bear! This steady operation of the smart machine shows a determined purpose, but it is more a betrayal of long ears than an exhibition of brains.

Our neighbor the Vidette shows hopeful signs of amendment. The editor listened to St. John's lectures, reports them with infinite gusto, and warmly commends his labors. With Fithian in the cold water band wearing a blue ribbon in his button hole, hope would spring up for the weary, and joy would come home to the disconsolate. It has been proven before today that good can come of Nazareth.

WHAT WEAPONS SHALL WE USE?

Elder J. W. Webb, before he left town yesterday, placed a communication in our hands which we publish to-day (although somewhat belated), because of the useful moral it teaches. He complains of the abuse and vilification "persistently and maliciously" heaped upon him by a licentious newspaper published in our midst. He came to Salem with his family intending to make this favored spot his home, bought a little property, and set to work with a zeal and devotedness that mark the true missionary spirit, to preach God's word and inculcate sound morality. Our citizens know Elder Webb to be a man spotless and without reproach, wide awake, progressive, and expending himself in an effort to advance the welfare of our race. He has won the esteem of all who witness his labors, and his usefulness is recognized in stimulating thought and activity.

But he is an active propagandist of the St. John cold water doctrine, and according to the proscriptive views of the editor of the Statesman, this deprives him of all right of fellowship. This excellent man is ridiculed and persecuted until life becomes a weariness, and, according to his own avowal, he is now thinking of disposing of his interest here, and removing to some locality where he can receive decent treatment. We have before called the attention of the Statesman editor, and the business men who support him, to the abusive and injurious tone which marks that paper day by day. Citizens who dare to do their own thinking, and who refuse to be registered and labeled as followers of a certain political school, are denounced as cranks and malcontents, and the whole vocabulary of billingsgate is poured on their heads.

The ill-judging newspaper man is cautioned by discreet counselors against the unwisdom of this course. He is driving votes away from the republican party; he is endangering republican prospects in this county more than all the glib sophistries of Mills, or the solid, convincing arguments of St. John. These prohibitionists are not the men to be turned from their purpose by abuse. The city was full of them on Monday, brought hither from all around to listen to their eloquent leader, and our cotem. had a good opportunity to form an opinion of the character of these men. They have clearly gone into the cold water ranks to stay. Whether former republicans or democrats, there is no denying the fact that they are earnest thinking men, determined to exercise the rights of freemen and willing to accord that right to others. We may be annoyed at their secession from their party ranks, and maintain the belief that they could best accomplish their end by working within party lines; but these men think differently, and if one proceeds to argue with them, they are ready with reasons for holding the faith that is in them.

Thus we are met with a political exigency. A cause of dissension has arisen and there is an upheaval of political parties. This cannot be averted with sugar-coated promises, it cannot be suppressed with ribaldry and abuse. It has to be accepted as a concrete fact. We may caution our friends who still acknowledge allegiance to party against the extreme and impracticable views of these social reformers, for counsel and logic are the only means that avail. On one side are the prevailing arguments of the three St. John, and a zeal in his co-workers that is an augury of triumph; and on the other side are the reproach and security of the Statesman. Which weapons are likely to win? This question is now up for the consideration of our brother journalist and his readers.

The editor of the East Oregonian, a good democrat, does not agree with his brethren in Multnomah Co., who declare that power and place are worth no more than the money that is in them. The Pendleton gentleman has risen to the height of a great argument. Speeches and preference have light weight in his eyes; his fight is for "the old, eternal principles on which the republic was founded." That's going a long way back and digging down deep. Such a crusade as that is somewhat adventurous in these days, and it would be well for him to ascertain the number of his followers.
