EASTERN OREGON.

The World Looked-at Through the Dust of a Flying Train.

A PROHI ON THE WING. Old Friends Jostled With--Lively Notes by the Way.

Soon after boarding the O. R. & N. train, who should take his seat beside me but that irrepressible prohi, (former democrat,) the ex-postmaster of Silverton? John recently sold out his business and resigned his Nasbyship to try Eastern Oregon, or Washington Territory, his health not being robust. He goes to Ritzville. Close to us was a grand daughter of one of our old preachers, Father J. K. Rule, of Gilroy, Cal., going with her husband and family to the same place. A Forest Grove good temple and prohi, and L. W. Robertson, of Independence, (brother to J. P. Robertson, of your city,) were also on board. Mr. R. was going to look after his stock ranch near Arlington.

ALONG THE MAJESTIC COLUMBIA the ride is very pleasant till you pass The Dalles, which shows signs of growth and improvement. Then the sand blows so as to penetrate the cars, and sometimes to stop the trains as effectually as snow drifts. Indeed, the sand is fenced against, as snow is on eastern roads. Chinese and white men, wearing goggles to protect their eyes, are kept busy shoveling off the tracks. Timber is scarce here and the only grass is of the bunch variety; the green sod of the Willamette being missed, and the landscape dreary in aspect. At Bonneville dinner is announced an extra good meal being served, including chicken, strawberry pie, and ice cream for dessert. But you receive only 25 cents change for your dollar on passing out.

At Arlington, supper. Here we stop to talk politics in the M. E. church. Mr. Frank McFarland, a prominent merchant, who used his full influence to carry the county for the amendment, and, with the aid of others, grandly succeeded, opened the church, lighted up and rang the bell. A good sized audience listened so well, that we came near staying with them too long to catch the 9:20 train for Echo. Mr. McFarland is the publisher's friend. Without soliciting outside of his store he has secured over 100 yearly subscribers, "cash down," for the Pacific Express, the organ of the prohibition party. A good many prohibition votes can be counted on in June and November. Mr. Mascher decided to stay over till the next afternoon, so as to hear one more straight prohi speech.

Here we discovered Henry Clymer and brother, of Marion county, who are stock ranching hereabouts, the former having taught school the past season; he looks fat, sun-browned and hearty. They accompanied us to the train. The last Methodist pastor, Bro. Dewees, was a Willamette University student. You find them reflecting credit on the institution everywhere.

WHAT'S IN A NAME? Considerable, Shakspeare (or Bacon) to the contrary notwithstanding. This place was formerly called Alkali, but that was too suggestive of the nature of the soil in the neighborhood. Now it is a county seat, it is called, more euphemistically, Arlington. Just as Hangtown, in the California mining region, now aims to push into oblivion its lynch law history, by dubbing itself Placerville; and as the lovely island of Van Dieman's Land veils its old name, so suggestive of convict days, in the more euphonious one of Tasmania. Gov. Moody, whom we espied at The Dalles depot, has a warehouse here. In sheltered spots the peach grows thriftily, but where the wind can catch the trees they bend over considerably, like the oaks near the coast of Southern California. The large stocks of barbed wire at the stores betoken the scarcity of fencing timber.

The contrast between primitive and modern methods is well exemplified on the river. Yonder are the Indians, patiently sweeping the water for salmon, hour after hour, with long-handled scoops or dip-nets, while the white man's fish wheel, turned by the current, automatically works day and night, picking up the finny prey and throwing it into the receptacle provided.

Arlington had a disastrous fire recently, but is re-building, partly with brick. The question whether it can retain the county seat, located here by Gov. Moody, on the organization of the new county of Gilliam, will overshadow the tariff, congressional, legislative and even the presidential issues. June 4th will end the agony.

The lodge of Good Templars I had the pleasure of organizing, four years ago, is still flourishing. There are lots of life and business in this growing young town, but

THE PREVALENCE OF SALOONS, and the many stockmen, rough, jolly and free hearted, who come in, give it the appearance of a frontier or mining town, especially the latter, because it is built in the V, or gulch where a large valley narrows down, to the river. Among other improvements going on are a fine reservoir and water works.

At midnight reached Echo, named by Mr. J. H. Kountz, after his little daughter. It was too bad to see the fine flouring mill with $20,000 worth of new machinery, propelled by a $5,000 flume, in ashes, supposed to be the result of sparks from a night locomotive engine.

J. W. W. PENDLETON, May 12th. STATE NEWS.

From a conversation with our heavy wheat-raiser to-day, says the Pendleton Republican, we learn that the outlook was never better. The soil a half-inch below the surface is moist, and with one good rain between now and June 1st, our wheat crop will prove a heavy one.

The Polk County Itemizer gives the details of the accidental killing of W. R. Machett, foreman of the lumber yard at La Camas. The tilting of a car while being unloaded on the wharf, threw the load on this man, and his body was mashed from the shoulders downward. His death was instantaneous.

Harney Valley Items: As Mr. Thos. Bates and family were driving over a bridge across Silves river; some fifteen miles southeast of Burns, the bridge gave away, upsetting the wagon in the water. The father succeeded in rescuing all of his family except his second son, who was drowned before he could be taken from under the wagon.

Ex-Senator Williams being asked his opinion of the prohibition vote in the state at the coming election, said: "My opinion is that the whole vote will not be any larger than it was two years ago, and it is doubtful if it is as large. A number of avowed prohibitionists in Clackamas county where I have just been, say that they will support the republican ticket."

The Bolsterer Atlantic Is a terror to timid voyagers, scarcely less on account of the perils of the deep than the almost certainty of sea sickness. The best curative of mal de mer is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which settles the stomach at once and prevents its disturbance. To all travelers and tourists, whether by sea or land, it presents a happy medium between the nauseous or ineffectual resources of the medicine chest, and the prohibitional benefit derivable from an unmedicated alcoholic stimulant, no matter how pure. The jarring of a railroad car often produces stomachic disorders akin to that caused by the rolling of a ship. For this the bitters is a prompt and certain remedy. The use of brackish water, particularly in long voyages in the tropics, inevitably breeds disorders of the stomach and bowels. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters mixed with pure water nullifies its impurities. Similarly it counteracts malarial and other prejudicial influences of climate or atmosphere, as well as the effects of exposure and fatigue. Take it for kidney complaints, rheumatism and debility.

THE EDITOR TAKEN TO TASK.

Fewer Saloons Will Not Diminish the Evils of the Liquor Traffic.

ED. CAPITAL JOURNAL:—Want of time rather than want of heart has prevented of late my taking part in political discussion through the columns of the JOURNAL. But, I think your article in Saturday's issue entitled "The Crosby License Bill," ought not to escape fair criticism. In the first place, an article intended to appeal to the judgment and influence the action of intelligent men should be free from derisive and abusive epithets, such as "cold water disciples" and "fanatical followers". Second, such an article should be consistent; that is, its several statements should not contradict one another. The following pairs of statements seem to the writer to fall short of this requirement:

"The legislature of New York enacted a license law, which the governor vetoed. * * * Would it not have been wise in these cold water disciples to allow this bill to pass?" "The opposition to this useful measure did not come chiefly from the whisky interest. * * * The whiskyites were stirred with a fear such as had never possessed their souls before, declaring that high license would take the bread from thousands of small dealers."

Third, such an article should not be weak enough to assume as a basis for argument, or as a reason of denunciation, what is not admitted to be true. The statement, therefore, that "The money that would be saved to tens of thousands of homes, and the comfort that would be gained by multitudes of wives and families now kept penniless by the debauchery of the bar-rooms, was never heeded in the selfish clamor," is totally without point, whether intended as a charge against the "whiskyites" or the "cold water disciples". And for these reasons, high license will be sure either to increase the cost of whisky to the consumer or to cause it to be wretchedly adulterated.

If the first result follow, what becomes of the "money that would be saved?" Would not the "wives and families now kept penniless by the debauchery of the bar-rooms" still be "kept penniless?" But if the second result follow, what would become of the "comfort that would be gained?" The truth is, while high license will diminish the number of saloons, it does not follow that it will diminish their power for evil.

You further say: "The spectacle of avowed temperance reformers joining with liquor dealers to defeat a measure designed to relieve the traffic of its worst features, is shocking to the sense of every reasonable man." I reply the question of what a measure is adapted to do, justly has more weight with "avowed temperance reformers" than what it is "designed" to do. We are very sure that any license law, low or high, is not adapted "to relieve the traffic of its worse features." These worse features are inherent in the traffic itself. The saloon is naturally a school of vice—will the immoralities it teaches be less harmful because the tuition is higher? The saloon is the natural parent of pauperism, insanity and crime. High license may render her hideous offspring legitimate—can it make them less monstrous in essential character? The saloon is now the chief stronghold of political corruption; behind her screens, the bribe-giver and bribe-taker meet; in her dark corners the "goods" are delivered and the "boodle" is paid. Can license relieve the traffic of these features? But I think further argument were a needless waste of words.

The permission of government, however obtained, cannot make right what is essentially wrong. No government has the right to barter for revenue the health and safety and virtue of her people.
