AFFAIRS AT AUMSVILLE.

ED. JOURNAL: Yesterday about 10 a. m. the quiet little village of Aumsville assumed the appearance of its more densely populated neighboring towns, by groups appearing on the streets, and converging at the store and neighboring houses, where plans were matured for a complete surprise on Uncle John Beckner and his estimable better half.

On Monday Mrs. Beckner was decoyed away from home, and did not return until late in the evening, which gave Elva and her assistants ample time to prepare a sumptuous meal for over thirty guests.

Our school is progressing finely under the management of Professor Privett of Jefferson.

Politics is the all absorbing topic for conversation now-a-days.

HOW THE VETOES ARE MADE.

One of the secretaries at the White House, who has served there during the administrations of four presidents, including Cleveland, told me recently that the latter spends more hours in studying bills which are sent to him by congress than his predecessors spent minutes.

If in his opinion it is all right, he signs it; if not, all the influence of the capitol can't stop his veto. He usually keeps well up with congress in his work upon the bills, and has them signed or vetoed early in the ten days allowed him by the constitution after their receipt.

Occasionally he receives a batch of hard cases that have bothered congress, but finally got through. Then it is that he summons Dan Lammont, drives out to "Red Top," shuts himself and his secretary out from the world, and makes a day of it.

The result of such an expedition is usually two vetoes to one approval, and the anxious claimants have come to look upon "Red Top" as the burial place of all their hopes.—Washington Letter.

Senator Berry of Arkansas is the Lochinvar of the senate, with the difference that he stole his bride by means of a canoe instead of a steed.

Mrs. Berry was Miss Lizzie Quile, the daughter of a well-to-do Arkansas merchant, and when the future senator came to woo her in the guise of a poor, one-legged school teacher (the other leg having been left on the field at Corinth), his suit was opposed by her parents.

But the bold lover one night tied his canoe to the bank of the Arkansas near the lady's house and carried her away before the stern parent knew what was in contemplation.
