The Statesman says, "a free trade republican is no republican at all; he is a democrat." At this present moment our citizens are soliciting subscriptions for fifty copies of the Pioneer Press, it being understood that great organ of the Northwest, is "free trade republican."

In Kansas when the local authorities fail to enforce the prohibition law, on application to the attorney general by a sufficient number of property holders, that officer is authorized to suspend the police powers of a city and appoint a force of metropolitan police. This has been the resort in Wichita, a city of 60,000 people, which has hitherto defied the law.

ELLENBURG (W. T.) CAPITAL. The CAPITAL JOURNAL, now one of the neatest papers on the coast, has secured the services of Mr. Frederic Lockley as editor. Mr. Lockley was formerly leading editorial writer on the Salt Lake Tribune, and stands at the head of the journalistic profession on the Pacific Coast.

"Whom the gods would destroy they first render mad." How does our adolescent friend of the Statesman apply this old Roman proverb?

Hon. E. H. McKelroy leaves to-night for Roseburg, where he delivers the address at the dedication of the new public school building, to-morrow, and the memorial day address on Wednesday.

H. A. Thomas has purchased the property of W. D. Wheeler at 286 Mill street, near Winter, and after some improvements are completed will make his home there.

Mrs. Jno. Phillips, twin sister of the late Mrs. Bennett, came over from Newport, Benton county, with Mrs. Bennett's little daughter, to-day to attend the funeral.

THE DINNER PAIL.

NOT MANY WHO CLING TO THE OLD FASHIONED IDEA.

What a New York Tin Merchant said to a Reporter—Evolution of the Dinner Bucket—Patent Devices and Contrivances.

When New York wasn't as big a town as it is today it was much more of a custom than now for mechanics and apprentices and other day laborers to carry their midday meal with them to their work. Men and boys who toiled in factories and stores could be seen in the morning trudging along bearing bright shining tin dinner pails. Today it is pretty hard to find proportionately as large a number who follow this old habit.

A down town tinware merchant said the other day: "I used to do a big business in the one article of dinner pails, but for eight years now it seems to have amounted to nothing at all. The cause? Why, I guess it must be that mechanics and others don't like to have the trouble of carrying a pail to work in the morning and back at night. It's inconvenient in the surface and elevated cars, for the coffee is likely to be spilled in the jostling and crowding of the cars. Then, if a man is near enough to his workshop to be able to walk there, he isn't likely to carry a pail, for, of course, he had rather go home to dinner. No, the bulk of workmen in New York to-day seem to do without pails such as we used to see when we weren't so populous and proud. Still they get hungry when noon comes around, and they must feed. Lots of them bring meat and bread from home in paper, and throw the paper wrapper away when they are done with it."

Their drink? Well, they can work the growler, or go out and buy lager or anything else. Besides, there are more inexpensive eating houses now than before, and plenty of men who used to carry their dinners with them find it just about as cheap to go out and eat. This is more convenient, too. Some workmen on houses in process of construction in new neighborhoods must carry pails, but they wouldn't if they could help it. Often the "free lunch" gives a man a stay to his stomach, and he makes his supper a heavier meal than it used to be. This also helps do away with the dinner pail. Out on the aqueduct and along railway lines being built or repaired the tinman don't use the pail much. The co-operative mess which they have seems to do pretty well for most of them, and those who don't have that stuff their food in their pockets."

A REGULAR REVOLUTION. In spite of all this fading off in the use of the dinner pail in New York city, the dinner pail of this day is better than that of ten years ago. It has gone through a regular evolution. First it was simply a plain tin pail with a cover. You could put in meat and bread and pie and peaches, and whatever other solids the appetite craved, but there wasn't any room for coffee because you put it in a bottle. Then somebody devised a pail with two compartments, one part being one another. In this way coffee might be carried in one of the parts, when some other goods got up a pail with four or six separate parts, all fitting into each other and making it possible to carry four or six articles apart from each other.

This was good, but it was discontinued by the fellow who got out a patent on a device whereby the coffee could be heated at precise intervals when the workman might be. The device consists of a wad of asbestos cloth two inches in diameter and an inch thick. This is covered with tin, and there is an opening at the top exposing the cloth. The whole thing is just like a small round tin box packed with asbestos and open at the top. The workman can carry it home at his shop some alcohol, and a cent's worth poured on the asbestos will do to heat his coffee. A great many mechanics have this asbestos contrivance and like it. Many of the contrivances are probably used in other towns than this. One other scheme has been patented. It consists of a tin pot, which may be filled at noon with water and lime. The heat so generated will warm anything placed over it, and as the compartment holding the coffee fits over the compartment in which the lime and water are, the coffee may be heated very quickly. This invention hasn't met with general adoption. There are other complicated dinner pails, into the bottom of which lamps may be fitted. They are mostly used in smaller cities.—New York Sun.

Maidens of Today. And yet what an immense contrast there is between the maidens of today and those of the three or four previous generations! When one dies today of too much study, twenty died day before yesterday, so to speak, of too thin slippers. The girls of today have exchanged those slippers, and with them the infantile short sleeves and low necks of the old daily wear; their walking shoes are thick solid as men's brogans; they used them vigorously, too, for they have learned that life and health are of more consequence than the admiration of chance men for a slender foot daintily shod; they do not allow their skirts to become dragged about their ankles, and they would as soon think of melting pearls in their drinking cups, if they had them, as of sitting with wet feet, either being too costly an amusement.

They wear flannels, too, at great thickness they themselves would go shuddering. They bathe seven times, not to say 265 times, more frequently and thoroughly than the departed dame did; and they eat what they want, and not what some male individual, adoring the etherial, thinks is about enough for them to eat and remain delicate. The dear departed one believed that pretty pallor and interesting peakedness and pipe stem bits were the chief requirements of a personal appearance, the modern girls believe that firm muscles, deep chests, free motion, and ruddy color are the only wear.—Harper's Bazar.
