THE THERMOMETER.
AN INSTRUCTIVE SKETCH ABOUT A VERY USEFUL INVENTION.
Three Kinds of Instruments in Common Use Throughout the World—The Fahrenheit Thermometer—The Zero Point—Method of Verification.
The thermometer in its crude form was invented by a Hollander named Cornelius Drebbel, who, it appears, made the first instrument, which he called a "heat measure," in the year 1624. His thermometer was simple enough, and had numerous defects, consisting of a glass ball at the top of a long tube, the lower end open and being placed in a vessel filled with water, colored by a solution of dilute of copper. This instrument was improved upon, and its defects gradually removed by others; but it was Halley, the famous English astronomer, who first proposed the use of mercury as a fluid for the thermometer.

THE CAPITOL ADVENTURE CO.
Attention to what we will mention!
Know All, by these presents: That the Capitol Adventure Co. neither slumbers nor sleeps, but are awake and up to the times, and know well that owing to the depression of business in the East there will be many failures. Now we want to be ready to capture any bargains that may be offered on account of such failures, and to do this it will be necessary for us to be on hand in New York and Chicago, in person, and be armed with plenty of the commodity commonly called Cash, with which we can boast the people of this country are well supplied, and in order for us to get it, we will from now until the first of August offer such bargains as will induce those having money to divide with us.

THE ZERO POINT.
In the Fahrenheit thermometers the space between the freezing and boiling point of water is divided into 180 equal parts or degrees, the former being 32 degrees and the latter 212 degrees above zero, which was so called by the inventor from the fact that he supposed it to indicate the point of absolute cold, or the very lowest degree that could be produced and measured by any instrument. But the lowest degree of cold possible to be obtained is now estimated to be 273 degrees, and the greatest artificial cold ever produced is 273 degrees, by the Fahrenheit thermometer. The zero point of a thermometer does not indicate the total absence of heat, as commonly supposed and the term seems to imply, for an absolute zero of temperature has never yet been attained, and has only been approximately determined, though it is considered "convenient as an ideal starting point." The zero of a Fahrenheit thermometer is the temperature of a mixture of ice and common salt, which is usually employed in the operation of freezing ice cream.

THE EKIMO'S RELIGIOUS BELIEFS
In reference to their religious beliefs and superstitions, the Eskimo is remarkably reticent, for the reason probably that their intercourse has chiefly been with rough, rude sailors, and they are afraid of having their cherished ceremonies made the butt of the white man's ridicule.
The dead are buried in the snow in winter time, and among the rocks in the summer, piles of stones being heaped upon them to keep off the wolves and dogs. With the male dead they bury a knife and spear. Before the era of guns they buried also a bow and arrow, but when these became obsolete they did not put a gun in their place, arguing soundly enough that he must be a poor hunter indeed who cannot get all the game he needs in the happy hunting grounds with a knife and spear as his only weapons. It would appear as if there were advanced thinkers, moreover, who held that even the knife and spear are not necessary in a land of such unlimited plenty, and who accordingly deprive the dead man of both, for it is very rarely that graves are found still containing these articles. With the women they bury nothing, holding that somebody will hunt game for them in the next world just as they have done in this.—J. Macdonald, Editor of American Magazine.
