GEN. FREMONT.

The dispatches from Chicago speak of Gen. Fremont as "a singularly fit candidate for the second place on the ticket." This historic personage has visited the convention hall and made a speech which stirred up some enthusiasm. It happens very unfortunately for the candidacy of the Pathfinder that the historians of Abraham Lincoln, in the current number of the Century, devote a chapter to the recital of the part Fremont took in the war. The pressing need of the hour was to save Missouri, and a military commander of experience and discretion might embody the union sentiment in that state so as to quell the insurrectionary fire everywhere stirred up by Gov. Jackson and Gen. Price. The writers tell us, "almost universal public sentiment turned to John C. Fremont as the desired leader for the duty," and he was commissioned a major general in the regular army, and appointed to the command of the western department, consisting of Illinois and the states and territories between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains. Messrs. Hay and Nicolay remark on this appointment: "For a man whose genius could have risen to the requirements of the occasion, it was a magnificent opportunity—an imperial theatre. Unfortunately the country and the administration had overrated Fremont's abilities."

The situation was urgent and Fremont allowed two weeks to pass before he sent his letter of acceptance and oath of office. Gen. Scott telegraphed him to proceed to his command without visiting Washington, and Postmaster-General Blair day by day urged him to go on to Missouri. He reached St. Louis after delaying three weeks, and found anarchy pervading the state, houses and bridges burned, farms plundered, railroads obstructed and broken, loyal men kidnapped and assassinated. Gen. Lyon's weak force was without provisions or supplies, but he held the field gallantly until defeated and slain at Wilson's creek. Fremont, who had just returned from Europe, put on absurd style, appointed a personal staff of foreigners conspicuous for their fantastic titles and gaudy trappings, and hedged the approach to his office with a cordon of bayonets. Instead of bringing order out of chaos, he made the confusion more dire, by his contempt for military methods and his endeavor to force emancipation on the government. Gen. Hunter and Col. Frank Blair were secretly instructed to watch his comings and goings; Mrs. Fremont took offense at any interference and went on to Washington, where she caused serious embarrassment. He was removed to avoid counter-rebellion. After the crushing exposure of unfitness made by writers whose testimony cannot be impugned, it would be folly to put Fremont's name on the ticket as candidate for vice-president. He is an interesting character, his life and adventures are a good theme for romances, but his is not practical, and his reputation would shrivel up like parchment before the fire of a presidential campaign. The best men the party affords are wanted for the ticket, and it would be fatal to set up any hero in buckram from an indulgence in weak sentiment.

GLADSTONE is a land owner at Niagara Falls. He has a patch of land on the Canadian side commanding a fine view of the falls, and though speculators have tried several times to induce him to sell, he will not part with it. A DISCONSOLATE Missouri widow has brought suit against the editor of a local paper for saying that her late husband had gone to a happier home.

COMMUNISTIC EXPERIMENT.

Some two or three years ago a party of Americans afflicted with the communistic idea, and unable to carry it out practically, owing to the prejudices of the community, went to Mexico, and set up a colony at Topolobompa bay. The basis of the scheme was the old familiar one, as it has been described scores of times. The Topolobompans were to have everything in common, give up all ideas of personal liberty, ambition, progress and betterment of condition, abandon not only the right to hold property, but to buy, sell or acquire it in any way, and to claim no reward for toil, skill or aptitude in any direction. Those who had a mind to work would pool what they produced for the common use, and those who preferred indolence would, of course, live off the earnings of the others. In short, it was to be the ideal of the socialistic plan, a fool's paradise.

The colony has now been in operation for two years, and no tidings coming from it, the governor of that district visited it recently and found, what might be expected. The communists were housed in tents, which gave them little or no shelter. They were meanly clad and had a precarious supply of provisions. They had grown idle and thriftless, and led a mere animal existence; most of them spending their time in indolence or fishing, and the whole colony was fast getting down to the savage condition of nomads. They had had a fair chance to test the virtues of socialism, and again it had proved an utter failure. It is objected that our present system of competition—one striving against another—produces selfishness and injustice, and the weak are pushed to the wall; but it also brings out the active qualities of the race, as our reward is generally proportioned to our usefulness. The above experience, which has been oft repeated, is a sufficient refutation of Henry George's land theory, which assumes that the soil, like air and water, is free to all, and is subject to occupancy alone—not ownership. This has been the policy of the government in the management of the Indians, holding their lands in common, but allowing each member of the tribe to cultivate all he chose. They have been lumpy and unprogressive under such a system, and the government has now wisely determined to allot the lands in severalty and let each red-skin rustle for himself. Selfishness is not an amiable quality, but providence has made it the chief incentive to exertion.

THIS is the second day of the convention, but the public interest in its work has not yet culminated. California has won the honor of furnishing the permanent chairman. There is an excess of zeal in the delegation from the Coast State, which may be due to its keeping open house and treating friends convivially. The Oregon delegates are more devoted to business, and do not figure so conspicuously in the deafening clamor. Judge Thurston's sagacious counsel to respect Blaine's expressed wish has given offense to that statesman's most effusive friends, and they threaten discord in the convention. But we hope to see moderation and good sense prevail. From the many eminent republicans whose names are mentioned for the presidency an acceptable choice can be made, and we look to see this noisy halloo for the man from Maine give way to better judgment.

"A TRUSTED book-keeper," as the dispatch reads, in a New York bank, has betrayed the confidence reposed in him by turning up the husband of two wives. He was impartial in the distribution of his company, spending alternate nights with each of his fractional spouses, and explaining that his off nights were spent in posting his books in the bank. This story might do service for awhile, but how he divided himself up on Sundays is not explained. When our gay Lothario's matrimonial entanglement was exposed, the bank people were thunderstruck at his immorality, his lawful wife was prostrated with sorrow, and his second spouse called him a mouster. But he took it all as a matter of small moment.

BELVA LOCKWOOD gives as a reason for her entry in the presidential scrub race that Elizabeth of England and Isabella II. of Spain, both commanded their armies in person. She says, in the event of her election: "I could sit in my elegantly-furnished rooms, like Grover Cleveland or Gen. Phil Sheridan, and dictate to that machine that we call the army and that other machine that we call the navy, and, if the recent speech of a noble English lord is correct, with 200,000 men could capture England and make my headquarters in London."
