Leaving Something for Children.

Of the thousands of people who are straining every nerve to leave their children something, how many ever reflect that every man is as sure to leave his children something as the sun is to rise to-morrow morning! It may be an ample fortune in one case, or a tendency to life long nervous dyspepsia in another, but an inheritance of some sort each parent is bound to entail on his offspring. Over the money inheritance he often worries himself into softening of the brain, but as to the inheritance of physical and mental qualities—the dyspepsia, ill temper, or despondency on the one hand, or the health, courage, culture and noble character on the other—these he thinks will take care of themselves. He is right. They will take care of themselves, and there is just where the mischief lies.

Now, if every mother, for example, were only a Mother Carey's chicken, instead of a human being, she could safely adopt this leave alone course, and recommend it to the paternal Mother Carey's cock. These happy creatures have few parental anxieties. Their young inherit from them none but good and useful qualities. The first minute they are fledged they take straight to the water, and never to beer or whisky. As for flying, both impulse and power are so perfectly transmitted in their organization that they are rapt up bodily into the sky, and sent winging it over the deep. Born to swim, born to fly, born to eat fish, they simply set to work to do it, and so each little downy birdling starts out in life with an inheritance amply sufficient for a successful career of business, travel to foreign parts, and congenial social enjoyment.

Far different is it with human children. Every once in a while, indeed, one of them is born with an organization as marvelous as that of a Mother Carey's chickling, only of a vastly higher and more complex kind. Look, for instance, at that miraculous boy who has lately been entrancing Boston with his music. To the great ocean and the limitless sky ranges of Beethoven he took as instinctively as the seabird to the billows and the air. Still, even though a musical millionaire from the start, his careful father has felt it will never do to let him run wild. The boy is never allowed to get into bad musical company of the Jim Crow order. Few parents, however, transmit such an organization to their children. And yet they have transmitted one, and surrounded it with influences to call it out. The children will have to cope with it all their lives.

Why not think, then, of what has already been left the children, as well as of what may be left them in money, if business turns out well. If a father has bequeathed a child an irritable temper, why not, in mercy, try to bequeath him the example of a parent who has governed and controlled the same infirmity for a lifetime. The child inherits not merely what the parent inherited, but the good or the bad use the parent made of such inheritance, the calming or the inflaming influence of the life lived in the child's presence. There are people in plenty in the land who have succeeded in leaving their children money. What is wanted is more who succeed in leaving them intelligence, purity, self-control, the memory of a happy home, consecration to a high way of living. It is a rare father who has not reason to look back with terror and remorse on a great many things he has already left his children, and for which they will have to be made, indeed, if they ever "rise up and call his memory blessed."—Boston Herald.

English Servant Girls' Faults.

The modern servant girl does not know her work, and, worse luck, there is no one to teach her, and that is the plain truth of the matter. No public institution, however good, can really fit a girl for "domestic service." In a large institution a girl learns nothing of the difficulties and trials of a small establishment, where, instead of being one of one large body, with distinct and defined duties, she finds herself thrown on her own resources and [illegible] the hardest task of all—to think for herself. I remember very well the experience of a friend of mine, who took a girl from a large school where orphans were taken care of and trained as servants. The girl came, a sweet gentle faced lass, respectful, willing and obliging, in short, a treasure, whom [illegible] and maids were, for a wonder, unanimous in praising. One day I missed her and asked the cause. "Oh, she has left, said the work was too hard."

Never, never again will I take a girl from one of those institutions. The girls are good, well trained in manners and mind, anything you like, but they are not taught to think. Why, that very girl used to leave the nursery brooms and pails outside the door, and when checked for it said naively: "Oh! I thought the girl whose turn it was to clear up would put them away." Another time nurse found her wandering around the nursery regions looking for the lift to convey the dirty boots and shoes downstairs to be cleaned, and she finally gave me warning, dissolved in tears, because she could not really manage the work, and on her return "home" I had a sharp letter from the matron in reply to mine, wondering "how I could think of overworking a child so shamefully?" because I asked her to do work all my other nurse girls had done easily, and which her successor, the daughter of an old servant, of her own free will, supplemented by taking the mending of some of the house linen off my hands. Until mistresses are prepared to teach their servants themselves they will not have good ones, or in fact servants at all in the real sense of the word.—English Paper.

Not all Rose Colored.

"The man who goes to housekeeping after having lived in a boarding house most of his life, naturally rejoices at the change, because after all, there is nothing like putting one's feet under one's own mahogany, don't you know?" remarked a benedict, "but those who are not so privileged should not imagine vain things. The man of the house has a thousand more responsibilities than the man who boards, and these, in a measure, balance the advantages. For instance, it not infrequently happens that the servant becomes obstreperous and has to be discharged."

"Then he finds that there is coal to carry up, that there are furnace fires to rake down and keep ablaze, that there are window shutters to shut, and that the milkman and the baker come at a disgustingly early hour in the morning, and that if he wants cream for his coffee and rolls for his breakfast he must get up and answer their knocks at the gate. He finds, too, that there are clocks that all the time demand winding, that there are people who seem to make it a business to ring his door bell and ask where Mr. Smith lives, and that there are a thousand and one little errands that Bridget used to do that he has to do now himself. Oh, yes; there are a good many things to mitigate the joys of housekeeping, especially when you happen to be without a servant girl."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

LANDS AND HOMES.

Marion county is situated in the heart of the magnificent Willamette valley, the central gem in the cluster of rich counties that form that princely domain, and is the banner commonwealth of the great northwest in all the essentials that go towards making it a profitable abiding place, and a home for the thrifty farmer, the cunning artisan and the industrious mechanic.

Rich in its agricultural resources in its cultivated and uncultivated lands, in its water powers, and minerals; rich in its colleges and schools of learning, and with a climate unsurpassed for its salubrity, it presents to the immigrant from the overcrowded states, where cold winters and hot summers, with terrible cyclones, prevail, who comes to the coast with some means, advantages that no other county in Oregon possesses.

Much has been written of this western country that requires a stretch of the imagination to comprehend, and numerous complaints are heard from the class who have been misled by them, so in this brief sketch the writer desires to avoid exaggeration as to its present and prospective advantages, asking those in the east into whose hands this may fall—particularly those who have their eyes directed toward this coast—to peruse it carefully, feeling that it is not written to lure immigrants within its borders, but only as a truthful discription of a land which, if it does not "flow milk and honey," contains within its bosom wealth and resources equal to any other country on the Pacific side of the Rocky mountains.

BOUNDARIES.

Marion county is bounded on the north by the Willamette river and Butte creek which separates it from Clackamas county; on the east by Clackamas county and the Cascade mountains, which separate it from Wasco county; on the south by the Santiam river and the north fork of the Santiam, separating it from Linn county and on the west by the Willamette river.

PHYSICAL FORMATION.

The county contains, including valley, prairie and mountain land, about 9?0,000 acres.

There are two main divisions, the mountain and the valley. The latter extends from the Willamette river to the foot of the Cascade mountains, a distance of about [illegible]teen miles.

The mountainous portion contains some fourteen townships of mostly unsurveyed land; lying in a strip twelve miles north and south by forty miles east and west, and comprises all classes of land, from rich narrow valleys in the passes, up through all the grades of rolling, hilly and broken, to that of rock bound canyons and inaccessible craggy peaks. It is generally heavily timbered, and in the near future will be valuable for its lumber supplies. These hills and mountains afford a wonderful summer range for stock, and many of the more enterprising farmers are availing themselves of this opportunity, and when the cold frosts of autumn approach the stock are brought out to fresh pastures, thus enabling them to survive the winter storms with little care.

GREAT ADVANTAGES.

A decided advantage Marion county has over many others is the diversified farming interest that can be carried on throught the entire year; notwithstbnding this is a wet climate during the winter months the uplands are seldom too wet to work, and long before the prairie farmers are through with their seeding, the hill farmer is preparing for his summer work. And yet the low lands are much preferred by many; the yield per acre is generally greater, and perhaps less labor is required to place the soil in proper condition for crops; and then should the season prove dry, the bottom lands are sure to bring the best crops. No better farming land can be found in the United States than that on the noted Howell prairie, French prairie, Santiam prairie and Salem prairie. The soil of these are wonderfully productive. With good cultivation, forty bushels of wheat and sixty of oats per acre can be readily secured.

FACILITIES FOR MARKET.

The Willamette river, with two lines of railroad running the entire length of the county from north to south, with the Oregon Pacific road crossing the southeast corner of the county, affords ample facilities to reach a market in any direction.

SALEM

Is the capital of the state and county seat of Marion county, situated on the Willamette river—and on the O. & C. railroad. Costly buildings have been erected, among which the state capitol building, county court house, Chemeketa hotel, opera house, new public school building, Catholic school building, Methodist church, Willamette University, and many private residences and business blocks, which will compare favorably with older and larger cities.

GENERAL.

All things considered, the Willamette valley has the best country in the world, and Marion county is about centerally located therein. To those seeking homes in the west, no better opportunities can be offered, than are found here. Persons desiring information regarding Marion county or the Willamette valley, those wanting farming lands, stock farms, business property or city residences, will be promptly and reliably informed by addressing the well known firm of Willis & Chamberlin, real estate agents, opera house block, Salem Oregon.
