A FREEPORT, Ill., special tells a romantic story. Joseph Degan, city, and father of a prominent railroad man, whose head quarters are there, left Freeport some eighteen years ago, and settled in Kansas. He left his wife behind him, and about two years later he secured a divorce by some means and married a Kansas woman. He lived with wife No. 2 for about fifteen years until her death. Degan was a lone widower for a year, and then found his heart was turning to his first love. A few days ago he surprised everybody by turning up in Freeport. He hunted out his first wife, found her still single, and after a few days of courtship they were remarried, and will settle down in that city.
