

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the great success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the article itself. It is merit that wins, and the fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla actually accomplishes what is claimed for it, is what has given to this medicine a popularity and sale greater than that of any other sarsaparilla or blood purifier before the public.

THE FINEST DRIVE IN THE STATE

Of Oregon. The line of the Salem Street Railway Company runs through the middle of this addition, and no lots will be more than two blocks distant from the line. Highland Park will in the near future be

THE MOST POPULAR RESORT

Residence lots within the limits of the city of Salem are worth on an average over $1000. We can sell you better lots in Highland addition for one-third of the money, and being directly on the line of the street railway they are practically "half so far" from the public buildings and the business part of the town as the majority of the so-called "inside lots."

ON GUARD.

Some of the greatest misfortunes that have ever fallen upon people have happened when they least suspected them and when a moment's forethought and the least self-possession would have prevented. Now you can always be ready to guard yourself from improper or had acts by yourself. To say you cannot is to say you are insane. Oh, do despise all bad habits and cast them off; adopt good ones. Many a man has carelessly walked forth on a morning from his home to find in a few moments his whole life blasted, all the gates to hope forever closed, when a little self-restraint must have prevented it. There should not be made one careless step or uttered one careless word. We cannot prevent all misfortunes, but to thousands occurring around us every year how often do we hear this accompaniment—"Oh, if I had only thought, I might have prevented it!"

POSTAL AND RAILWAY.

The government of Hungary owns many of the greatest railway lines of its country and derives a huge revenue from them. As a business measure it has adopted a plan to induce its common people to travel. Tickets are first, second and third class, and the purchaser goes the whole distance if he desires for the same charge as for a short trip. It is on the same principle as our letter postage. The poorest family can afford the longest trips on third-class tickets. As an evidence of its success, we observe that independent lines owned by corporations there are adopting the same plan. It is a purely money-making speculation. A great publisher understands it when he advertises that he prefers to make one cent off a million people to one dollar off a thousand. Our American railways prefer the one dollar off the thousand. It can't last, however, for the day is coming when some road under a great liberal management will adopt the sensible view. The present charges are absurdly restrictive on six-sevenths of our people, who literally never travel on the railways at all.

ARCTIC CLIMES.

We, who dwell in the south, are apt to shudder at the idea of a residence in the extreme north and wonder how the residents there can stand the cold. But we must remember that there are compensations given by nature for almost every condition. Owing to the position our planet earth has to the sun the regions of the extreme north have many advantages, the chief of which is the quick coming of spring and the longer day-light they enjoy. Early in March they have as long day-light as we have and very speedily after the middle of the month their days begin to exceed ours in length, until soon the sun begins to rise about two o'clock and set about eleven. Farther north still they have a continuous day for weeks. In Southern Lapland, owing to these long days and the protection against the north wind given by a great mountain barrier that runs from east to west, the summer is long and very hot. Grain sown in June is fully grown and ripe within six weeks, on account of the long day-light. In truth, along the Tornea river, the inhabitants have many enjoyments of life that would surprise the dwellers of the extreme south. Of great parts of Alaska the same may be said.

A Dog That Can Tell Time.

Samuel Reid, the truck man, is the owner of a very intelligent setter, and he never tires of telling of the many wonderful performances of his pet. Last night Mr. Reid told his wife, in the presence of the dog, to arouse him at six o'clock this morning as he wished to go to the Rosedale dock to begin his work on a large stock of freight which was awaiting his attention. This morning Mrs. Reid failed to awake at the hour named, and Mr. Reid was aroused by hearing his knowing dog scratching at his bedroom door. He instantly arose and, upon looking at the clock, discovered that it was 6:20 o'clock. Mr. Reid says it would take considerable money to tempt him to dispose of the dog that seemingly so well understands the English language and is withal so faithful and knowing.—Bridgeport Farmer.

...a symphony, a medley of life and death, a grand aggregation of man's glory and his shame. It is in short a bird's eye view of all magnanimity and meanness, the joys and sorrows, births and deaths, the pride and poverty of the world, all for five cents.

The trial of twenty-seven miners at Mines, Prussia, charged with fermenting and agitating strikes, resulted in the acquittal of twenty-four and the conviction of three. The evidence proved conclusively that the whole trouble was the work of spies and detectives in the employ of the police, and the three convicted were of that stripe. Between monopoly in front, and spies, agitators, cranks, political frauds and labor educators who have grown too lazy to work the masses of honest toilers have a serious time of it.

Now that all of the Oregon people who can afford it have gone to spend a few weeks at one or the other of the inviting coast watering places the paragraphist is afforded the opportunity of remarking that in the spring the people go to the falls and in the fall they go the springs.

She got Even. A Portland man tells a good story on General Gibbon, the gallant commander of the Columbia. The story runs that General Gibbon and a party of friends were fishing in the Tualatin, about eight miles from Gaston, a few days ago. The general was standing upon a rock in mid stream, when a farmer appeared on the scene, rake in hand and addressing him, said: "Mister, you know that we don't allow trespassing here." As he spoke, the farmer pointed to a placard reading that trespassing was prohibited.

"Very sorry, but I did not know it," responded General Gibbon, trying to maintain his equilibrium. The cool answer fired the farmer. "Can't you read, don't you see these signs?" He roared.

"I can see the signs, but I can't read. I had an idea that they went to show that the farm was for sale." This retort knocked the farmer speechless and he retired from the field. His wife then came to see what she could do with the hero of Gettysburg. She began by giving him a scowl that came near transfixing him to the rock upon which he was standing. Then she bawled out: "You had better go to school and learn to read."

"Madam," replied the general, very politely, "I am most to old to learn to read. I—"

General Gibbon never finished his sentence. If he did the remainder was drowned in the roaring waters of the Tualatin. He unfortunately lost his balance and plunged head foremost into the cold stream. When he came to the surface the woman was breaking her heart for joy and dancing a Comanche war dance.

"That's good for you," she exclaimed exultantly. "Next time you will learn to read. Hurrah!" Then she went her way rejoicing and left General Gibbon's friends to fish him out of the river.

A Fortunate Druggist.

Mr. Edwin W. Joy for many years and now a prosperous druggist on the corner of Stockton and Market streets in San Francisco, probably never dreamed of rivaling in wealth the medicine kings of the country. But various rumors having been floating around to the effect that he has struck it big, an Examiner reporter was detailed to unearth the cause, and after much difficulty unraveled the following story. It seems that about seven years ago an English physician, a great student of botany, located in this city. His practice was not extensive, and yet the few cases that came to him attracted no little attention. His success seemed to be in the treatment of liver and kidney disorders, and vitiated blood. In fact his ability to cope with these common complaints was marvelous. He seemed almost infallible, and his quiet modest methods and his well-kept secret was as much a mystery as himself. After his departure about a year later Mr. Joy determined to follow the secret, and copying all the prescriptions he had filled for the same doctor he began a systematic analysis. In his examination he discovered running all through the prescriptions for liver and kidney troubles, vitiated blood and stomach disorders a couple of vegetable extracts indigenous to California, so simple and so well known under homely every day names to every school boy as to entirely dispatte the suspicion that they were the active principles involved. So certain, however was Mr. Joy that he had discovered the secret, that he embodied the new elements in a preparation of Sarsaparilla to disguise the taste, and put it before his customers under the modest name of Joy's Vegetable Sarsaparilla. Immediately the same marvelous stories came back of its astonishing effects, and the mystery was solved, and the talk it has created has already caused it to step into prominence, and orders pour in daily from all over the coast. And thus another California industry leaps into existence.—S. F. Evening.

...a casket. was small and a few simple words of eulogy, a few sweetly harmonious vocal songs a sad yet soothing melody, and all at once the air was disturbed by a flutter of wings, and as the casket was opened among the flowers, for a last looked at the beloved, three pet doves came fluttering down and looked mournfully and wistfully into the dead face, with trailing wings. They seemed to a stranger as mute but sorrowing mourners. The dead had loved them, and in all their short lives they had been her care, so now it seemed proper that they should take part in the ceremony.
