Napoleon the Great.

A little while ago I stood by the grave of the old Napoleon-a magnificent tomb of gilt and gold, fit almost for a desty deed-and gazed upon the sareophagus of rare and nameless marble, where rests at last the ashes of that restless man. I leaned over the balustrade and thought about the career of the greatest soldier of the modern world. I saw him walking upon the banks of the Sein contemplating suicide. I saw him at Toulon. I saw him putting down the mob in the streets of Paris. I saw him at the head of thearmy in Italy. I saw him crossing the bridge at Lodi with the tricolor in his hand, I saw him in Egypt in the shadows of the pyramids. I saw him conquer the Alps and mingle the eagles of France with the engles of the crays. I saw him at Marengo at Ulm, and at Austerlitz. I saw him in Russia when the infantry of the snow and the cavalry of the wild blost senttered his legions like winter's withered leaves. I saw him at Leipsic in defeat and disaster-driven by a milion bayonets back upon Parisclutched like a wild beast-banished take an empire by the force of his genius. I saw him upon the frightful field at Waterloo, where chance and fate combined to want the same fate combined to the same f to Elba. I saw him escape and reand fate combined to wreck the fortunes of their former King. And I saw him at St. Helena, with his hands crossed behind him, gazing out upon the sad and solemn sea.

I thought of the orphans and widows he had made-of the tears that had been shed for his glory, and of the only woman who ever loved him, pushed from his heart by the cold hand of ambition. And I said, I would rather have been a French peasant and worn wooden shoes. I would rather have hved in a hut with a vine growing over the door, and the grapes growing purple in the amorous kisses of the autumn sun. I would rather have been that poor peasant, with my loving wife by my side knitting as the day died out of the sky—with my children upon my knees and their arms about me-I would rather have been that man, and gone down to the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust, than to have been that imperial impersonation of force and murder known as Napoleon the great.—

A FAMOUS BATTLE-GROUND.

On the banks of the Tippecanoe, a small stream which enters the Wahash River in Indiana, was fought the terrific battle of Tippecanoe.

In this great struggle of frontier times, the allied western Indians under the chirftainship of Elskwatawa, the "Prophet" were defeated in No-
