Hints to Hop Growers. Meekers' circular to hop growers The reports just at hand are to the effect that we may look for a good erop yield of both foreign and do mestic yards whatever the outcome of qualities may be, and that we will be brought face to face with a of the world. It therefore behooves the grower, more than ever before to look well to his quality, as effected by the "handling," or "manufacturing" of his growth,

After proper cultivating and bringing forward the crop to healthy maturity, which can only be done by thorough cultivation and close pruning to prevent excessive growth of foliage, five things are necessary to complete the process to make strictly choice hops.

First-To pick them free from large stems and leaves. Second-To cure them thoroughly and at a low temperature. Third-To properly sulphur. Fourth-To preserve the hops as near whole as may be, Fifth-To bale before the hops have absorbed moisture, and not too compact. But little need be said as to the first proposition, as all are keenly alive to the importance of cleanly picked hops. Nothing short of perseverance, and a constant strife with pickers will accomplish this.

The Hop Harvest.

George W. Hubbard, the veteran hop buyer of Tustin City, Cal., arrived in Salem this morning and will make this city his headquarters until the crop of 1889 is all disposed of and shipped. He has great faith in Oregon hops and says all indications point to a good harvest this fall, Should the weather continue as at present picking will not commence before the first of September. Even then he fears many yards will be picked before the hops are thoroughly ripe. Last year, he says, many hops were lost by late picking, but that is a mistake of unfrequent occurrence. This year the tendency is in the opposite direction. To ob-Hops thus cared for always command the top of the market.

Salem's Progress.

The city of Salem has always been a flourishing city, but the achievements of the past year have attracted to it wide attention because they have placed it beyond the merely plodding growth of older towns of the west. Factories have been built and put in operation, improvements in water works and electric plants have been made, a street railway company was organized and over four miles of track have been constructed and placed in operation this year, warehouses, business blocks and residences have been constructed and every part of the city has taken on an air of progress entirely beyond anything it has known before.-West Shore.

Houses for Rent.

The ery from every direction is for residence houses for rent. Real estate men say they are scarce and a visit over the city proves the truth of the assertion. The demand far exceeds the supply and yet dozens of new houses are under course of construction. But they are all engaged long before they are com-
