NOT SETTLED YET.—A paragraph is going the rounds of the Oregon press under the caption of "The Oldest Grave." It recites in effect that the grave of Alexander McTavish, who was drowned in the Columbia river in 1814 was probably the oldest. The Grant's Pass Courier objects to this assertion in the following language: "Alexander McTavish was not the first white man that died in Oregon. Two years before he was drowned John Day, a hunter from Kentucky, died at Astoria. This was when Astoria was the headquarters of the Jacob Astor enterprise, and nearly two years before the McTavishes saw Oregon. It was John G. McTavish who, as factor of the Northwest Fur company, and not the Hudson Bay company, that sometime in 1813 purchased of McDougal, Astor's resident partner, the Astor outfit for a mere song. It was this perfidious act of treachery on the part of McDougal that defeated Astor's plan to occupy Oregon by an American fur company, and practically expelled Americans from all Oregon, and the northwestern ocean and fishing. The McTavishes were in no sense the harbinger of civilization or the advance guard of civilization. They were rather the rear guard of receding barbarism. They, and the company they represented were the most dangerous and persistent foes, the real pioneers of civilization had to combat with."

LUCKY ESCAPE FROM DEATH.—This morning, about 9:30, as the open street car was coming around the Y on the corner of State and Commercial streets, headed north, John Tichnor, the driver, suddenly fell in a swoon, forward over the front of the car. His feet caught on the railing and his head and body were dragged in close to the wheels of the car for some ten or twelve feet, before the horse was stopped by Mr. Holcomb, an expressman. Mr. Tichnor was carried into Gibson & Singleton's drug store, and medical aid summoned. After he had gained consciousness he was conveyed to his home, on Commercial street. His escape from being dragged to death, was only averted by the accident occurring in the business portion of the city. No cause can be given for the trouble, only that in standing on a damp platform so long and with such little exercise it had a tendency to cause the blood to rush to the head, and he has not been very well the past few days, anyhow. Johnnie is an industrious young man and is the main support of his mother and her large family, and it is hoped that nothing serious has overtaken him. The family reside at 412 Commercial street.

THE KILLING OF "DAGO FRANK."—There was no great deal of surprise manifested by those who knew the man when the news reached this city that "Dago Frank" had died with his boots on at the hands of a fellow gambler at Spokane Falls says the Baker City Reveille. The murdered man's true name was Frank Silva, or Sylvester, he was an Italian and gained some notoriety in Astoria, Oregon, where he stood up for three rounds before John L. Sullivan, the prize fighter, in his tour of the country four years ago; and it is understood that twelve years ago, he served two years in the Oregon state penitentiary for stealing a watch. His reputation was that of a tin horn gambler who had been run out of almost every town that he visited. His slayer, Tom Eldridge, according to the Spokane paper, bears a tolerably fair reputation. The jury of inquest declared his act a justifiable one. Dago Frank is known among the sporting fraternity of Salem. He did some time in the pen as stated above.

HE LIFTED HIM.—"My God! what have I done?" exclaimed a rough-looking tramp, as the proprietor of the Bon Ton restaurant, on Commercial street, lifted him clean over the sidewalk with his No. 11 boot. "Done?" exclaimed the restaurant man. "You have eaten enough grub for three men, and now have the impudence to tell me that you have no money. Why didn't you say so before you ordered your breakfast?" And the tramp walked thoughtfully towards the depot to see what his chances would be on a break-beam for a more healthy climate. "Keep your eye on Pasco."

A CURIOUS TOWN.—This is the dog-gondest town on record, says the Vale Atlas. Last Monday night some one took our rooster and one hen from the roost. As the most likely strangers in town, Judge Olmsted and John Harris were promptly accused; the judge claims to be able to prove an alibi, but would hate to, while John says he was falling down the corral ladder about that time. Judge Courtney, also here, is above suspicion, of course. It is a great source of thankfulness that they overlooked Pete, the turkey, further along the roost, and the pig in the annex.

Take your savings from your sock,
And just hoof it for our block;
Leave the folks that pick your pocket
in the lurch.
For we have the largest stock,
All our prices are bedrock,
And competition we knock
Off the perch.
J. G. Wright, dealer in groceries, crockery and glassware.

A CELEBRITY.—Joe Holladay, the man whose name has figured in the courts and in the newspapers during some time past; the man who banished himself from the state for a month or two in order to baffle the courts and prevent the service of legal documents, was seen by this scribe yesterday for the first time. Joe had been in attendance at the supreme court and returned to Portland by the afternoon train. One always has the mind made up as to the physical appearance of the man from reading of his transactions, and doubtless many who have never seen this cranky brother of Ben Holladay's were like the writer and imagined him a large, imposing looking man, of stern, commanding presence, with a touch of eccentricity and humor mixed in his contrary nature. But not so. Joe is below the average height; has a countenance portraying a cross-grained, grasping disposition; this decorated with a pug nose of a roseate hue that must have taken steady application to obtain a beard the exact counterpart of a billy-goat and this animal, you know will gobble on to anything from old cast iron upwards. Joe is not a very lovable looking character and some who know him say his looks in this respect do not belie him. At the depot he seemed to see no one with whom he wished to mix, but went off to the corner of the platform and communed with himself while gazing on the handsome landscape along Mill Creek, and when the train came along he didn't wait for his turn to get on but jumped across the track nimbly as a cat and climbed on from the off side. Joe won't get left if he knows it.

BEEN THERE BEFORE.—A Portland boy who was visiting his cousin up in Linn county shot a Chinese pheasant one day while they were out hunting, says the Silverton Appeal. As they approached town in returning from their hunt the astute country cousin took the pheasant from the Portland boy's hands and deliberately pulled its tail feathers out. "Why did you do that?" indignanty asked the city youth. "That makes him an owl," said the country jake with a knowing wink. "There ain't no law 'gainst killin' owls in Linn county." The Portland boy whose father belongs to the Portland Rod and Gun Club, sneered as he said: "Well, you must be a jay; when my old man does up a China, he brings him home tail and all." "That's all right for Portland," said the country cousin, "but I tell you we have law up here in the 'Forks.' You Rod and Gun Club fellers would't know a law if you was to meet it on the road."

REMARKABLE PAPERS ON IRRIGATION.—The subject of irrigation of the arid lands of the United States is being taken up by some of the most influential newspapers of the East as well as of the West. "Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper," of New York, announces a series of four articles on "Uncle Sam's farm," accompanied by a map of the federal aid to the work of navigation. The papers are from the pen of Mr. Joseph Nimmo, formerly Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, and they are the result of several months observation in the West and a close examination of official data. The first article will be published in the number dated November 16th.

AN OLD FRIEND.—J. E. Farmer, formerly of Illinois, but now of Wolfe Creek, Oregon, made a visit to Salem, yesterday. Mr. Farmer is a personal friend of ye scribe and the visit was a pleasant one. Ed has settled down and taken unto himself a better half and is prospering nicely, which will be glad news to his Illinois friends. He went to Turner last evening, where he met his wife, and to-day they proceed to Portland on business.

THEY WILL SOON BE HERE.—Its only a short time until the opera house will be crowded again with people listening to the Chicago Comedy Company. The Tacoma Ledger says: Notwithstanding the heavy rain last evening the Chicago Comedy Co. drew a crowded house, and gave the utmost satisfaction. The reports given by the press throughout the entire northwest have not been exaggerated, and no doubt they will draw crowded houses during their week's stay.

"HOME SWEET HOME."—Squire Farrar and family arrived home this morning from a nine weeks tour of the Eastern cities. Mrs Farrar and children did not proceed farther east than St. Souis, but Mr. Farrar himself visited New York, Boston, Philadelphia and all eastern cities of any note. Their trip was a most pleasant one and many sights were seen. This was Mr. Farrar's first trip east for twenty-eight years.

POSTPONED.—Walter Leonard, the young man who was injured in the Capital Lumbering mills several months ago, is having a severe time. The physicians have decided that the arm will have to be amputated to save the young man's life. The operation was to have been performed Monday, but has been postponed a few days, BOAT NEWS.—The Modoc will be up from Portland this evening and will go back Friday morning. Owing to the lowness of the river the boats are not running with any regularity at present.

ABLE TO BE OUT.—Mr. L. Goolsby, the young man who was struck by a windlass on Tuesday afternoon, while at work on the Ferry street sewer, is able to be out on the street again.

WANTED.—Two or three active, intelligent agents wanted at 95 State street, Salem, Oregon. A good paying business. Call and see.

ATTENTION SMOKERS.—Just received at the Candy Kitchen 10,000 of those famous "Ko Ko" cigars. The finest 5 cent cigar in the city.

For good hardware go to Chas. Pugh, State street.

HOUSES WITHOUT NAILS.—This morning a JOURNAL reporter was making a bee line for the postoffice at a 2:40 gait when he was suddenly stopped by a pleasant looking Oregonian who had passed the last 25 years in this state and in his former days had made a tour of the south and then came to Oregon. As soon as the reporter had whirled around and said a "Pleasant mornin'." The old gentleman said: "Young man did you ever see a house built without nails? I have, and tolerably neat and comfortable, too. In Confederate times, in the south, we learned a good many arts unknown before to us. The women wove their own clothes, for instance, and farmers raised corn and hogs instead of cotton and were never so independent before or since. But there were a good many articles always considered necessities which we had to get along without, among them being coffee and nails. Fair substitutes were discovered for coffee, however, and, as I said, we got so we could pretty nearly do without nails. The ordinary farm house was built of logs. These were put up in regular "pen" fashion. The door facings were made of split timber, shaped and smoothed by a jack plane, or more frequently by a drawing-knife and held in position by wooden pins. The inside walls were faced with the same timber, wooden pins again taking the place of nails: But perhaps, the chief d'oeuver of the self-taught mechanics was the roof. This was a poser for a while, but the problem was solved and the roof was built in this way: The rafters were put up in the usual way, wooden pins fastening the tops and the "feet." The end rafters, however, were longer than the others, being extended over, say two feet, or whatever distance you wished to protect the roof beyond the wall, The lathing was then pinned across the rafters and you were ready for the boards. Upright pins in the ends of the elongated rafters held a pole in position which served as a foot rest for the first "layer" of boards. Cleets a foot long were then placed in position, feet resting against the first pole, then another pole was laid on, being held up by these cleets, and answering the double purpose of holding the first layer of boards in position and serving as a footrest for the next layer. This process was repeated until the roof was completed. Ingeniously constructed locks were then placed on the doors and your Confederate house was finished.

LUCKY ESCAPE.—This morning while several workmen were erecting telegraph poles on Commercial street an accident happened that came near causing the death of one of the workmen, Elsworth Nichols. The pole had been hoisted to the top of the derrick and the order to lower it into the hole had been given, when the huge pole reeled, causing the derrick and all to fall. The monstrous pole fell in such a manner that Nichols was caught by it and his head fell underneath it in the mud. The spot being low where his head fell is all that saved him from meeting an untimely end. The shock dazed him for a few minutes, otherwise he was uninjured. Those who witnessed the accident stood horror-stricken for a few minutes.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.—Articles of incorporation were filed with the secretary of state to-day, as follows: The East Portland Plumbing Co., of East Portland, Or., with P. A. Wagner, T. H. Parrott, W. H. Bears and Jas. Paquet as incorporators; capital stock $1000, divided into 100 shares, of the value of $100 each. The Union Fuel Co., principal office Portland; with John Effinger, G. W. Emery, J. C. Flanders, as incorporators; the capital stock is $10,000, divided into shares of $100 each. The Cornell Park Co., principal office in Portland; capital stock $5000, divided into shares of $100, with V. E. Andrew, R. W. Thompson and U. H. Hall, as incorporators.

FINE BULL.—Mr. Al. Moisan, of Brooks Station, has just purchased from Wm. Fugus, a thoroughbred bull, known as the American Short Horn, and is named Hambert. It was raised by L. Fugus, of Newport, Mo., and is one of the best bred bulls on this coast. It is a beautiful animal, and has a fine pedigree. This animal will be kept at Brooks Station.

APPOINTED NOTARY PUBLIC.—The following persons were appointed notaries public by Governor Pennoyer to-day: R. J. Ashby, Linn county; W. C. Shepard, Benton county; J. W. Blackburn, Sherman county; C. W. Nanville, Baker county; Geo. F. Crow, Lane county; Thos. F. Cowing, Clackamas county; E. Evert, Multnomah county, and R. W. Thompson, Multnomah county.

MEET TO-NIGHT.—The stockholders of the Young Men's Investment company will meet at the parlors of Ladd & Bush's bank to-night and adopt by-laws and elect a board of directors.

ITS A PLEASURE.—To eat at a place where you are served by obliging waiters as at the Candy Kitchen.

NEW ARRIVAL OF CLOAKS.—Something new, nobby and nice at Lunn & Brown's Commercial street.
