

JEFFERSON SCRAPS.

JEFFERSON, Dec. 18, '89.
Christmas is coming.
Santa Claus has made his headquarters for the next ten days.
If you want a nice present come to Jeff to buy it. You can't fail to be suited, both in variety and prices.
The people of this place are agitating the bridge question again; with a strong pull and a long pull we hope to succeed.
One car load of the machinery for the flouring mill of this place has just arrived from Michigan after about twenty days on the road.
The saw mill here is doing a good business, although of small capacity they ship lumber to Portland, Albany and are now shipping some to Salem.
There will be another entertainment given by the school Friday evening under the management of the principal, the last one being given by the primary department.
Jefferson is sorely in need of a bank. The business here demands one, who will step to the front? There is no question but what the scheme is a good one and hope ere long we will have it.
There was quite an excitement in this city last Friday, as the Eugene local going south held up at this place. Deputy Sheriff Wrightman stepped off, having in charge two young men from Salem, who were arrested on charge of having "disturbed the public school" of this place about the 10th of October last, the warrant having been sworn out by Prof. Van Scoy. On account of having no justice of the peace here, the arrest was deferred until one was appointed. Lawyer Hayden conducted the case for the defendants, while Bingham appeared in behalf of the state, the result of the trial was the releasing of the young man Bowman, as there appeared to be no evidence against him, while Rhodes was found guilty as charged, and fined $10, and costs, amounting in all to $73.50.
"G."

Some people are born to make money, and some are born to be poor. Perhaps we are apt to blame the man who is unsuccessful too much, and to give too great credit to the man who succeeds. It may be there is no such thing as luck, but there is such a thing as the knack of making money. I don't think all men who are poor are so because they have not worked hard enough. There is a way of making money breed money, but it is a much more difficult thing than breeding anything else. You can breed race horses out of horses, and cows out of cows, but breeding money out of money isn't quite the same kind of thing. It is all a matter of judgment that some people's investments turn out very profitably, and other people's turn out a dead loss. I don't think so. I think there must be something else in it, luck or "knack" or something. It is an unfortunate thing for some people to be born with a desire to enjoy life as they go along; or to be born with the keen enjoyment of making money. The Scotchman saves all the lawbees, and rarely is very poor, rarely a millionaire. Small profits and sure returns are his motto. The Englishman, neither canny as the Scotch, nor speculative as the American, gets rich by kind of bulldog tenacity with which he holds on to things. The Hebrew keeps forever reaching out for the dollar, and like an expert bug-hunter, he never misses his game; and he makes interest out of everything.—Chronicle.

There is nothing much more agreeable than studying a frank, affable, kindly, friendly baby. The small child can petrify in a way that grown-up people can't approach. You can't always tell what a child is thinking about you, but you have no doubt at all that it is something that quite satisfies him, and you know that he does not care a straw what you think of him. When the small boy has made a mud pie and finished it off nicely, he stands off and looks at it critically, and he is pleased. You see that he is saying to himself, "I am very clever." There is not much difference between youth and age in that way. The painter, when he has painted a picture, stands off the same way and looks at it, and says to himself, "I am a genius." The writer, when he has written a fine paragraph, holds it out and reads it over and his head swells with conceit. But there is a difference. The small boy, when he has examined his mud pie, stamps on it and obliterates it. He is perfectly satisfied with having pleased himself. The artist goes about, demanding recognition and expecting other people to tell him what a great genius he is—and they don't. Then he kicks and says the public are bores and vulgar and don't appreciate art.
Counting the clergyman in, it takes three to make a pair.

MARKET REPORT.

A Synopsis of the Markets—Buying and Selling Prices.
Very few changes are to be noted in the market quotations this week. Wheat remains the same as last week. Hops have taken a slight rise but with no great perceptible change. Eggs have reached the 30-cent mark and firm at that. Choice fat hens, geese and ducks have taken a stronger move and are now commanding a good price. The free navigation on the river has had a tendency to strengthen the markets somewhat.
