Was Browniug a Jew? is the question which is just now agitating the minds of the London editors. Who cares whether he was Jew or Gentile, so long as his writings rank the highest of the century for moral strength and poetic beauty? He was but a human being—the reflection of his maker-and his highest ideals were truth and purity. Neither his origin, nor the blood of his ancestors can add to or detract from the greatness of his work.

If that was the truth the company would bury its wires at once and save the wages of a thousand men. But the n corporation representatives as arule are liarned we need not be sur prised at some of their statements.
