THE OREGONIAN KNOCKED OUT.

In the course of a column editorial, under the heading "Nobody Knocked Out," the Portland Oregonian says: The Salem CAPITAL is a republican paper, but not in all things a fair and just one. It prints these paragraphs:

Penneyerism vs. The Oregonian—and The Oregonian is knocked out. The Oregonians have again rejected the political distasteful of The Oregonian.

The Oregonian has to say simply that it had no more interest or stake in the republican candidate for governor than the Salem CAPITAL had; no more than any other opponent of "Penneyerism" in the state. It did not urge Mr. Thompson's nomination; it was no more its candidate than were Mr. Hermann, Mr. McBride and others on the republican ticket. It did what it could in behalf of all of them. It was apparent, however, that the governor was the only candidate upon whom there was any real contest; and so in common with other, The Oregonian, addressed itself largely to that contest, etc.

A good many people will be still of opinion that in the late political contest the Oregonian was knocked out, and that Mr. Penneyer's election was a personal triumph over that paper. To demonstrate this fact nothing more is necessary than to recall the record and methods of the so-called great paper. The Oregonian opposed Mr. Cornelius four years ago, and those who ascribe all political results to its influence, attributed the election of Mr. Penneyer to the Oregonian. The republicans of Portland, under the leadership of the Oregonian, were mainly responsible for the election of Mr. Penneyer. Because Mr. Penneyer did not fall in with all that the Oregonian advocates, it denounces him as a crank and demands defeat at the hands of the people for the man it was responsible for electing. That Mr. Penneyer had failed to satisfy the Oregonian, but had satisfied thousands of voters who are not democrats, is creditable to his excellency, and shows that the people prefer a public official who at least pretends to protect their interests to a public newspaper that always betrays them.

Mr. Thompson's friends may justly lay that gentleman's defeat at the doors of the great Portland paper. That paper precipitated the campaign of personal abuse and mud-throwing that ended in the defeat of Mr. Thompson. Its political methods of ridiculing, belittling and abusing every public man who refuses to become its tool are notorious. When such a paper singles out one candidate who is before the people for its attacks, it arouses unjust suspicions against the man whom it would help, and in this way the Oregonian gave Mr. Penneyer thousands of votes that otherwise would never have gone to him. So selfish and mercenary has been the course of this great paper that its support is a curse to any man or party. The people understand this and the result shows it.

The Oregonian was knocked out in the late election, just as it was knocked out when it employed whole pages and special editions to defeat Senator Mitchell, and just as it will be knocked out whenever the masses of the people consult their own best interests. The people are awakening on this subject, and are not going to be led blindly into casting their franchises to strengthen the power of a monopoly organ that is loyal to no party or principle except when it can advance its own bank account. The Oregonian no longer regulates the sun, moon and stars of Oregon politics. It is a fallen Lucifer, sputtering and guttering in the limbo of defeated ambitions, where its own course of treachery to the people has plunged it.

We said it was a personal triumph of Mr. Penneyer over the Oregonian. It was the people's triumph over the political methods of that paper, by re-electing Governor Penneyer. Though many would have preferred some other man for governor, they would not cast their ballots to strengthen the hold and influence of a corporation organ that opposes every measure in the interest of the people.

The battle of the people against the Oregonian must go on. That paper has been knocked out in the state election. But the people should proceed to break its power with the incoming legislature if they expect any good work from that body. There will not be a job introduced before that body, from electing a boodle senator to passing boodle water bills, that the great Oregon paper will not have its hands behind. Its record in the past ought to assure anyone of that. Its hands will be against the people every time.

THE CORRUPTING INFLUENCE OF PORTLAND POLITICS.

Large cities are not only the problem of government but the bane of politics. Their evil influence and demoralizing effects are felt in the whole country at large, and they are the poison fountain that vitiates the political stream of whole states and the nation. The corrupt practices prevailing in New York City lower the tone of every presidential election and drag down into the mire of Wall street, Bowery, and Five-Points politics the noblest efforts and the best aspirations of the American people. The same process on a smaller scale emanates from the large commercial center in any state. So San Francisco slums dominate and degrade the politics of the Golden state. So the boodle politicians and legislators of Portland cast a cloud over the otherwise fair name of Oregon.

The baneful influence of the Portland boodle methods was felt all through the campaign just closed. The frightful struggle for the control of the primaries of that city was something that the people in the farming communities are not accustomed to. When politics degenerates into a strife for bossism instead of a contest for principle the cleanly voter takes his hands out of it and votes his convictions. After a party is soiled by the filth and sium of such a contest the decent citizen instinctively shrinks from contact with it, goes to picking out the man of his choice and no application of the party lash can make him feel that he is not doing right.

Defeat stared the republican ticket in the face on the governorship, as soon as it was found that the delegation from Multnomah county was the result of the triumph of one boss, and that the voters of the state were asked to place the executive office under the political control and domination of Portland ring rule. That same ring would have sought to control every appointment of the governor and would have constantly interfered with the administration of the state. However much some may object to Penneyer, the people of Oregon may thank their good fortune that they have not been subjugated to the degrading influences of Portland slum politics.

This paper used what little influence it had to bring the republican state convention to Salem, and showed at the time that the party in the state at large would be the gainers by it, to have the convention and its deliberations removed from the baneful influences of Portland, and brought into a cleaner atmosphere. The center of a great farming community, as Salem is, must always be subject to more wholesome influences than a large commercial river city, where the lowest order of politics prevails, and where money is king at the polls. We still believe that a candidate free from ring influences and nominated in a clean and open convention in the interior of the state, might have been elected with the rest of the ticket. But under the circumstances there was a stigma attached to the Portland candidate that could not be removed in the minds of disinterested voters. The corrupting trail of bossism was over the head of the ticket, tho' he was himself an honorable man.

Gen. Odell at Silverton.

An article on the Salem and Silverton Motor line in the Silverton Appeal to-day says:

A MOTOR LINE. General Odell and Orrin Savage of the Salem & Silverton Motor Line company were in Silverton Wednesday night to confer with the city council about right of way up Water street. The Gen. says the Motor line will be finished by Sept. so that people can ride in to attend the state fair. The company already has right of way over all roads in this county from the county court. There is not room for two tracks on Water street, and there is a question as to the jurisdiction of the council in the matter of granting a right of way to a corporation since the road is controlled by the county, and is worked as a county road. The mill switch should have been located in the middle of the street at first, and the prevailing opinion is that there should be but one track for both the motor and the standard gauge Companies, and that it should be put in the center of the street and graded up so that cars would have no difficulty in crossing. There are some parties, however, who have business on the street who feel that they will be injured by a change of the track to the middle of the street but there are others along the west side of Water street who wish the road put in the center, claiming that they have staid a one-sided railroad long enough, referring of course to the mill switch. If both companies can come to an agreement as to joint use of a single track, it would be the fair thing, provided a majority of the property owners along Water street are in favor of the road passing up the street. Gen. Odell says the object of going up Water street is a likelihood of an extension of the road east beyond the city limits. The council will meet on the evening of the 16th inst. to further consider the matter, no definite action having been taken at the special meeting.
